

10-2

LIBRARY

OF THE

Theological Seminary, PRINCETON, N.J.

| Case, | SCC |
|--------|------|
| Shelf. | 25/4 |
| Book. | 1.1 |

HISTORY

Now Of the Propagation of Im. To

CHRISTIANITY,

And the OVERTHROW of PAGANISM.

WHEREIN

The Christian Religion is confirmed.

The Rife and Progress of HEATHENISH IDOLATRY is considered.

The Overthrow of PAGANISM, and the spreading of CHRISTIANITY in the several Ages of the Church is Explained.

The Present State of HEATHENS is inquired into; and Methods for their Conversion proposed.

By ROBERT MILLAR, M.A.

In Two Volumes.

The Third Edition Corrected, with Additions.

VOL. I.

L O N D O N:

Printed for A. MILLAR, at Buchanan's Head against St. Clement's Church in the Strand. M.DCC.XXXI.

in the state of th .

PREFACE.

T may be here expected that I should give some account of the Design I had in publishing this Book, and the Method I have made use of in writing it. My Design is to excite us to thankfulness to our gracious GOD, for being delivered from that miserable Darkness and Idolatry, under which we were funk, before the Light of our Holy Religion shone among us; to set before usthe wonderful Steps of Divine Providence in propagating Christianity over the blinded World down to the present Time; to move our Bowels of Pity for that flavery and thraldom to which the Heathens, who make up so great a part of the world, are yet chained by the Enemy of Mankind; and to make Christians with fervour and zeal contribute their utmost endeavous, that the Salvation purchased by Christ may be known to the Ends of the Earth.

The First Chapter, on the Truth and Excellency of the Christian Religion, was in my opinion necessary to this End. For if Men be not firmly perfuaded of this point, 'tis impossible they can be truly thankful for the Gospel of Christ, or that they can be fervent and zealous for the Propagation of it throughout the World. Atheists, Antiscripturists, Free-thinkers, as commonly called, and Deists, will never be concerned to propagate the Christian Religion (which they themselves believe not) among Heathens, Jews, or Mahometans. Nay, they who are carved out for this Work must believe, that there is none other Name under Heaven given among Men whereby we must be saved, but the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. I have therefore offered what appeared most proper and necessary to affert the Truth of both Natural and Revealed Religion, to remove the Props of Infidelity, and to fettle the Faith of Christians upon the solid foundation of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. Indeed we have all the Proof of the Truth of our Religion that the nature of the thing will bear, or that is agreeable either to the Wisdom of GOD to give, or the Reason of Men to expect. I know there are many excellent books printed upon this Subject; but the matter is so important, that it deserves to be studied over and over again: and I prefume this book may come into feveral hands who have seen few writers upon this Subject, and having read little about it, will be glad to find it treated here: and we ought to have a regard to those people, especially since Atheism and Unbelief are come to fuch a prodigious height, that learned and unlearned, town and country should be necessarily guarded against the Infection. And I hope that when any man of sense will be at pains to compare the writings of BLOUNT, GILDON, TOLAND, and other Antiscripturists, with what has been written by many excellent persons, and even with what I have offered in this first Chapter, he will casily discover the weak Reasoning, the bad Philosophy, and the strong and unreasonable Prejudices these adversaries are guilty of, and so will have the stronger and fuller confirmation of Christianity. Divine Providence wisely orders that what is designed to the prejudice of our Religion, does in the end As turn to its advantage.

VOL. I.

and

As to the Historical Part of the following Book, by which I mean the Third, Fourth, Sixth and Eighth Chapters, it may be observed, that the most part of Ecclesiastical Historians hitherto have mixed this affair of the Propagation of Christianity with fo many other things, that 'tis either flighted or negligently handled by them; or the Subject is not easily observed by common Readers, who cannot have their minds fixed upon so many things at once. Beside, they never continue the matter to the present time, fome ending it with the Twelfth Century, others with the Thirteenth or Fifteenth, and some are far from carrying it that length. The learned Dr. CAVE, to whom I own I have been very much obliged, in his Introduction to the Lives of the Fathers, has given us an excellent account of the Overthrow of Paganism: but he goes no further than to the end of the Fourth Century, and there leaves us. I therefore humbly conceived it would be proper to deduce this matter from the first foundation of the Christian Church to our time; that the Reader may at one view see the amazing conduct of divine Providence in all ages, in enlarging the Kingdom of CHRIST, and giving him the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. In the Eighth Chapter I have considered the endeavours of both Papists and Protestants, fo far as they have come to my knowledge, in the different parts of the world in the two last Centuries, and in that which is now run-The unwearied diligence of the Church of Rome may awaken us from our fecurity, to a more ferious concern about so important a work. Do they stop in bringing their Proselytes to a formal superficial profession of complying with some religious Ceremonies? PROTESTANTS should go farther, A 3 and inspire their Converts with the power and life of Religion, with love of the truth, as it is in IESUS.

 $\mathbf{\hat{W}}$ hen I think upon the great extent and heap of things that are in Ecclesiastical History, I have often entertained this opinion, that the best method to manage them is by parcels. What I now undertake is but one corner of that great field: yet 'tis of great importance; for the Propagation of Christianity in all ages, by the efficacy of the Gospel, accompanied by the Spirit of GOD, demonstrates our Religion to be divine. So that even the historical part of this effay, from first to last, is an argument of the truth of Christianity. Mahometism was propagated by the dint of the fword; whereever the Gospel shines, Pagan darkness slies away like shadows before the sun: but the Doctrine revealed by the Son of GOD, and confirmed by his death and fufferings, does flourish and spread over all the world, in spite of all the allurements of flesh and blood, and all the powers of hell and earth combined against it; and the longer it shines, the more glorious will the beauty thereof appear.

Tis true, the corruptions and innovations that have crept into the Christian Church, in doctrine, worship, ceremonies, discipline and government, with the opposition made to the same; the contests occasioned by Heretics and Councils, and by the pride, precedencies and preferments of Popes, Patriarchs, Cardinals, Bishops, and the rest of the Hierarchy, do now make up the far greater part of Church History. If men professing Christianity, especially Church-men, had walked more conformably to the Holy Scriptures, and particularly to the rules of the Gospel and the example of

CHRIST

CHRIST our Lord and Master, or like the Apostles and primitive Christians; there had been little occasion for these things. But the Propagation of Christianity is a subject attended with peculiar beauties, which the Church ought always to have in view. Here we see the accomplishment of the Predictions and Prophecies in the Old Testament, concerning the enlargement of the Gospel-Church, and the calling of the Gentiles fulfilled in every age of the New Testament, and the mercy extended even to ourselves; so that the uttermost parts of the earth are given to our Redeemer for his possession, and the isles wait for his law. Here we see Dagon falling before the Ark; ignorance, heathenish idolatry, cruelty, and the tyranny of Satan chased away by the power of the Gospel. Here we observe the Kingdom of Christ, without force of arms, spread itself through the whole world in a fhort space of time, and that by the preaching of a few despised persons, several of them being unlearned Fishermen: here we find the Word of GOD triumphing over all the power and policy of men and hell, making its way, in opposition to the wisdom of philosophers, the arts of magicians, the will of princes, and all the temptations and terrors of the world. This demonstrates its Original to be divine, and its Protector Almighty. Christians in many parts of the world seem now to be awakened to a more than ordinary concern to have the falvation purchased by CHRIST known over the whole habitable earth; and I desire to join my hearty prayers, that the earth may be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea; that all the kingdoms of the world may become the kingdoms of our LORD and and of his Christ; that he may reign for ever and ever.

I have sometimes taken notice of the state of remote Christian Churches, surrounded by Heathens and Enemies to our Holy Religion. The serious consideration of their case may move us to adore the Wisdom and Goodness of our God, in granting us the Gospel Privileges which we enjoy, that have been purchased by the death of our Redeemer, and transmitted to us by the wrestlings and sufferings, the blood and treasure of our noble Ancestors: And therefore we are called to a Christian improvement of so valuable mercies; especially when the barrenness of many places, that once enjoyed these favours, has brought them at this day under the feet of Insidel Oppressors.

I have also observed some good things in agitation in several parts of the world, for the Advancement of Christianity, which we have an account of by several Books and Papers which come not to every body's hand, who may have access to this performance; and therefore I hoped it might be useful to give some view of them, that every Reader may be awakened to a pious concern for the Church of God in the remote corners of the world; that they may wrestle for the same at the throne of grace, and may be excited to Charity and Good Works. One great use of Ecclesiastical History is to be subscribent to Divinity, and in this view I have endeavoured to manage what I here undertake.

I know not but some Readers may be weary of the account given of the Rise and Progress of Idolatry among several nations, from the creation of the world to the birth of Christ, in Chapter Second;

Second; of the Reasonings against Paganism, in Chapter Fifth; and of the present State of Heathers, in Chapter Seventh. But I am humbly of opinion, that without these the work would be imperfect, these Chapters being necessary to my main design: for serious thoughts upon the dismal State of the world before the Coming of Christ, may make us more truly thankful for the Redemption he has purchased, and for the errand on which he came, to destroy the Works of the Devil, and to bring Life and Immortality to light by the Gospel. Besides, the Origin and Progress of Idolatry may explain several Texts of Holy Scriptures, and clear up some Ecclesiastical Antiquities. In the Fifth Chapter I have not only discovered the Vanity and Folly of Paganism, but also given a taste of the state of the Controversy between the Heathens and Christians in the first ages of the Church, to enlighten the History of that time, and to make us value our delivery from Pagan darkness, and being brought to partake of the Privileges of the Christian Church. And this may also discover to Youth the Vanity of Pagan Superstition, when reading their Classic Authors, which are full of it. The present State of Heathens, in the Seventh Chapter, may not only open the face of affairs in these distant parts of the world, and lead us to understand what Christians have done to deliver these nations from Pagan Idolatry and Satan's Tyranny; but may quicken our Sympathy, and enliven our Prayers for those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, in the Habitations of Cruelty, and inspire us with a pious concern for their being brought to the Knowledge of the Truth. I have been also sometimes obliged to take some notice of the first discoveries made in Europe, of those remote Regions, of their Geography, History, Trade, Customs, &c. as well as of their Heathenish Religion; and the prospect I have given may help to direct men of judgment and zeal to contrive and employ proper means for their Conversion.

In the Last Chapter there are some farther Means proposed for the Conversion of the Heathens, with Arguments to promote the same. This is a work that my soul does earnestly wish for. If Christians would serve God in Spirit and Truth at home; if they would lay aside their Divisions, Parties, and unchristian Humours; if they would contribute generously, out of their worldly Substance that God has given them, for advancing his Glory in the world; if Kings, Princes, and public Societies would take the conduct of this work in their hands; if Persons of extensive Knowledge, bright Love and Charity to perishing Souls, and animated with ardent Zeal for the Glory of God, would offer themselves as Missionaries, and might be orderly sent into Heathen countries, especially where they can be encouraged and supported by European Colonies: If these things were done, what a glorious addition to the Church of Christ might we justly expect? And what Christian can refuse to give his helping hand to so good a work? Surely if he hath Love to our Redeemer, or real Desire to see the Honour of our God promoted, he cannot decline it. The time is coming, when the Fulness of the Gentiles shall come, and all Israel shall be saved. Let us do our duty, and we need not doubt but God will crown our endeavours with fuccess. So

So much for the Subject and Design of this Book. As to my Method in writing it, the design is large, In magnis voluisse sat est. I have had occasion to make use of several Authors in writing it, and no man can write with any accuracy of ancient Ecclesiastical History without them. I have endeavoured to do them justice, not only by giving their words in the Body of the Book, but also the place where they are to be found, at the foot of the Page. I did not think it necessary always to produce their words in the original Greek or Latin, except where there was an Emphasis. To have cited the whole original text of each Author, would have swalled be back text of each Author, would have swelled he book and price beyond what I intended. However, fo far as I could, I have endeavoured to be exact, and to see them with my own eyes. 'Tis true, fometimes my little Library would not furnish me with each of them, but I have been obliged oftner than once to Friends and good Neighbours, to whom I here render my thankful Acknowledgments. In the three last Chapters of this work I had few Authors who went before me; I did not meet with any who had reduced the feveral things that relate to my Subject into Order, and therefore I was obliged, from Narratives scattered in several Authors, to cut out my way the best I could, which may plead excuse for Imperfections or Faults, tho' as far as I could I endeavoured to guard agianst them.

After all, there are no doubt many Defects and Inaccuracies in the Performance. It was written by starts, amidst the hurry of a multiplicity of affairs that lie upon me in the Pastoral Charge of a Great Congregation, besides many other lesser avocations. It was not my main business, I rather looked on it as a Relaxation; I went to it and came from it as fuch. Nor do I pretend to that Politeness of Stile necessary for the refined taste of some delicate palates: but the Design is good: The time is coming, and I hope near at hand, when God will do great things for Advancement of our Redeemer's Kingdom. May a holy warmth, through the bleffing of God, diffuse it self far and near, for the Salvation of perishing Souls, and may a great Harvest be reaped in every corner of the world. If any thing in this Performance makes us truly humble and thankful for our Christian Privileges; if it helps to cool uncharitable Heats among our selves; if it contributes to make us more ready to join heartily together in our Prayers, and to embrace every opportunity of promoting the Glory of God and the Knowledge of Christ, by supporting and propagating Christianity, and overthrowing Paganism in any part of the world; if it in any measure enlightens our Mind, establishes us in the Faith, and enflames our Zeal for doing good, may the only wife God have the Glory, to whom alone it is due.

Paisley, October 21st,

THE

HISTORY

OF THE

Propagation of Christianity,

AND

Overthrow of Paganism.

CHAP. I.

The Truth and Excellency of the Christian Religion confirmed.

HE glorious enlargement of the kingdom of our Redeemer over the world, the prefervation of it for so many ages, the overthrow of heathenish idolatry, which had so deep rooting for some thousands of years, and yet was overturned, not by might nor by power, but by the rational methods of the Gospel, enlightning the minds of men, and persuading them to subject themselves to the laws of Christ, of which we have an account in the following history; are plain proofs, that the Christian Religion is of God, and is no human invention. Nevertheless I judge it proper, in the entry, to demonstrate the truth and excellency of our holy Religion, that we may be fully persuaded of the truths it reveals; that we may admire the providence of God in the propagation and preservation thereof, and Vol. I.

may be inspired with a true zeal in promoting the same over the world.

The Being of God, of divine Providence, and the Immortality of the Soul, are fundamental truths in Religion, which we shall demonstrate in the first place, to raze the grounds of atheism, and to confirm our faith in these important articles.

The existence of God is a truth no less certain than that of our own, and it may be eafily shown that 'tis a confequence of it: for as we have infallible evidence that we our felves are, so from hence we may be well affured that fomething has ever been. For supposing that there once was nothing, we may be as fure that neither we nor any other Being could have existed, as that nothing could not produce fomething, or that fomething could not produce it felf. This therefore cannot be doubted that fome Being or other eternally existed. The great question is, what manner of Being an eternal Being is? Now tis evident that an eternal Being was ever a necessary Being; the reason is, because it was without beginning: for 'tis as certain that a Being without a beginning neceffarily was, as that there was never any possibility of its not having been. 'Tis also evident, that this original eternal Being was not only fuch as of absolute necessity ever was; but also such as of absolute necessity must ever continue to be. By an absolutely necessary Being, I understand not what exists without any reason of its exiftence, but such a Being as ever contained a necessary reason of its existence in its very nature, without the least dependence either on its own will or that of any other Being. That there could be no other Being on whose will and causality such an evernal Being depends, is selfevident; and that its own will, which, as is equally clear, could have no influence on its existence, or the continuation thereof, because not antecedent thereto, is equally manifest. Consequently the reason of his existence must be included in his very nature, without the least Dependence either on his own will, or that of any other Beings; and therefore strictly and absolutely necessary.

'Tis therefore evident, that there is an eternal independent Being, and that such an eternal Being cannot but be absolutely necessary. To gain a more particular knowledge of this Being, we shall make some search into the import, and consider the reason of necessary existence, which, 'tis observed, this Being includes and possesses. First, it appears to be fully demonstrable, that the reason of an absolute necessity of existence can be no less than a complication of all actual perfections, or that there is no kind nor degree of perfection which is not comprehended in the nature of such a necessary Being: for that the author of all Beings can himself want nothing of that perfection, which he has communicated to his Creatures, is undeniable.

be

We have already observed, that for a Being to exist with an absolute necessity, is to contain in it self a necessary reason of existence, without the least dependence, either on its own will, or that of any other Being; or, which in effect is the same, to be of such a nature as renders it an absolute contradiction, that it should either cease to be, or become other than what it is, by an essential mutation. To this we may now add, that if a Being in any respect is effentially imperfect, it can be no such absolute contradiction, that it should ever either cease to be, or become other than what it is, in any other refpect. For there is no imperfection in any Being, but what implies a possibility of a greater and further imperfection, and consequently of the greatest of imperfections, viz. a ceasing to be. From which principles it evidently follows, that there is fuch a Being, whose nature excludes the very possibility of ceasing to be, and necessarily includes all possible perfections; and therefore we may with the greatest assurance affirm, that there is a God, that is, an eternal, absolutely necessary, and most perfect Being.

I know that there have been some, who have endeavoured to evade the sorce of these arguments, and all others, which have been well made use of to prove this sundamental article, by imputing the existence of us, and all things, to an infinite eternal succession of dependent changeable Beings. But such an infinite succession most evidently

B = 2

evidently implies an abfurdity; for it can have no cause from without of its existence, because all things which ever were in the universe are supposed to be contained in it. Neither can it have any reason within of its existence, because no one Being in this infinite succession, is supposed to be self-existent and necessary; and where no one part is necessary, 'tis evident that the whole cannot be necessary. An infinite succession therefore of merely dependent Beings, without any original independent cause, is supposing somewhat to be eaused, and yet that in whole absolutely caused by nothing; which is manifestly absurd. And whether we suppose this existence from nothing, to commence this day, or from eternity, 'tis equally a contradiction; and therefore the truth remains firm, and is further established, that there is an eternal, felf-existent, independent Being.

The Being of a God may be also very well proved from the inconfistency and absurdity, to which all those may be easily reduced, who have endeavoured to account for the existence of the world, and all things therein by matter and motion: for it appears, from what has been faid, that matter cannot be eternal; for if it be eternal and uncaused, then it must also have been necessary and felf-exifting, and invested with all perfections; so that it should have been absolutely impossible and contradictory to suppose it not to exist, or suffer any real change. But for any atheist to affert that it is so, would be the most absurd thing in the world: for is it not manifest that there is no contradiction in the nature of things, to suppose that the form of this world, the situation and disposition of its parts, the form of the matter of the whole, or any fingle portion, could be in any respect otherwise than what now they are? Do not we see some change which happens in it every other day? But we shall a little confider what some boasting atheists have faid of motion and matter: They first affirm, that matter is eternal; and next, that motion is an eternal effential property of it. The first of these is proved already to be false; yet here let us suppose it true, and then see if the atheist can support his principles by the second. Now

if

Chap. 1. The Being of GOD.

if motion was the eternal effect of matter, it must also have been necessary; and if it was necessary in the intire fystem of matter, it follows it was necessary to all its parts in the same degree: for all the parts of matter being, if equally eternal, equally necessary, 'tis unreasonable to imagine any one of their properties, which could not but exist with the very same necessity in all, to have been neceffarily different in any. To imagine any portion or portions of matter should have eternally necessarily posfeffed any property, which another portion as eternally and necessarily wanted, would be in effect to make the neceffity with which matter existed, to have been different, while we affert it to be the fame. If motion therefore was necessary to every particle of matter in the same degree, 'tis evident every particle of it must have moved alike: both comparative rest and increase of swiftness must have been equally impossible, and a constant uniformity of motion must have discovered it self throughout univer-But this being evidently false, it follows undeniably, that motion was not the eternal effect or necesfary property, either of all matter, or of any of its parts.

Spinofa, one of the most samous modern atheistical materialists, has affirmed, that there is only one numerical fubstance; that the material world and every part of it is the only necessary existing Being. Hobbes and he agree in bestowing intelligence on this material system of theirs. I need not stay to refute this: the principles already mentioned serve plainly to manifest its absurdity. Only I shall here remark, tho' they attributed intelligence to the system of matter, yet none ever afferted either the whole or any part of it to possess an essential li-berty and freedom of action, without which 'tis plain there could be no beginning of motion. And indeed, as has been observed, had they been inclined to ascribe a freedom of action to any one part of matter, they would have been obliged to ascribe the same freedom to all; and if so, they could not have failed of a confutation from every man's experience. To refute Spinosa's opinion, let it also be considered, that eternity does not so much as enter into the idea of matter: if it be eternal, it must exist of it self, which is the most excellent of all perfections, and does necessarily include all other; for if it exist of it self, it must be independent, almighty, eternal, unmoveable, and in a word, infinitely perfect. But 'tis unconceivable that matter, which is divisible, corruptible, unactive, and void of understanding, should be endued with the most noble of all properties, from which all others proceed. And as to one numerical substance, it does plainly appear, that the world is composed of innumerable substances really distinct from one another, and that the least atom can subsist, tho' other parts of matter were destroyed.

Epicurus, and fince him, a great tribe of ancient and modern materialists, have endeavoured to subvert the Being of God, by another way of explaining the motion of matter. They have made motion an eternal effect of a supposed eternal invariable action of matter; or that every atom, or particle of matter, necessarily possesses a certain determinative gravity or weight, independent on any other Being, by virtue of which gravitation, the atoms combined into separate masses, moved still, till by their concourse the world was formed as now it is. To refute this, we need only confider, that the gravitation of bodies is variable, according to the variety of fituations; which plainly demonstrates that it does not proceed from any eternal independent principle, effentially or necesfarily inherent in every atom or particle of matter (fince fuch a principle could not be uniform and alike in all fituations) but to be an effect depending upon fomething external. But if we should admit, that gravitation is fuch a necessary property of matter as the Epicureans would have it, yet itis impossible that it should have been the cause of that variety of motions which we experience in the world. For 'tis demonstrable, that the principle and laws of gravitation, fince they must of neceffity be allowed (if eternal) to be uniform and invariable, could never have been the necessary cause of various and contrary motions, such as may be observed in the present state of things: For instance, the projective motion of divers of the great bodies of the universe, tending to describe circles or ellipses, and the central motion of their several parts, tending always to strait Lines. If,

Chap. 1. The Being of GOD.

If, after all, any atheist should be so absurd as to object, that perhaps motion was neither absolutely without a cause, nor yet the effect of any universal internal principle effential to matter, but a mere passion, communicated from one part to another, in an eternal circulation, as Hobbes and Spinofa imagined; this is the most unaccountable supposition of any: for in the case of such an eternal circulation, there's neither any external agent supposed, which might be the proper cause of the motion, nor any intrinsick reason in the bodies moved; but the bodies are conceived, in a manner purely passive, to transfer that motion to each other, which none of them in particular posses'd with an absolute necessity in its osn nature, nor derived from the power of any proper agent whatfoever. Now this is to suppose motion to exist without either a proper cause, or so much as a reason of its existence; which is absurd.

We have now confidered at fome length the feveral ways by which the enemies of Religion have pretended to account for the motion of matter: and when all has been feriously weighed, it will appear manifest, that matter is no eternal self-active Being; that its motion must have been begun; that the cause of its motion must be some principle essentially distinct; and that this principle must be an immaterial agent, eternal, necessarily existent, and perfectly felf-active, which is God.

Tho' these arguments which I have already made use of to prove this necessary truth, are in themselves most convincing; yet because a great many persons, who may read them, are not accustomed to an abstract way of reasoning, I shall therefore now propose some moral or physical arguments, to prove the same truth of the divine existence, which I hope will be more obvious to every common capacity: as these following.

It the world be not eternal, then there must certainly be a God who made it. To ascribe the formation of the world to an accidental unmanaged meeting of material atoms, is ridiculous, and is already disproved. That it could not be from eternity, the hills and valleys do plainly demonstrate. The rains that fall on the earth, the rivers which run into the fea, continually carry away fome of the height into the Bottoms. Be the quantity then ever fo fmall, 'tis certain the mountains would be levelled, and the valleys filled up in an infinite space of time. Were the earth from all eternity, there would be no mountains, no valleys; it would be all covered with Besides this physical proof, there are others which are very convincing; the remotest histories do not look back above five or fix thousand years; the inventions of arts and sciences, and the erection of states, is but of yesterday in regard of eternity, as was long ago observed by the heathen poet Lucretius*. The ancientest monuments we have are very modern, being compared with infinite time. 'Tis impossible, if the world had been eternal, but the memory of some more ancient history than any we have must have been preserved. It cannot be conceived that men should be an infinite length of time without inventing things necessary for life; that they should have lived like favages, without any certain places of abode, without towns, without fociety; and that there should not have remained some monuments of great antiquity. All this persuades us that the world is not from eternity, but was created in time, according to fcripture account, by God.

B 4

vers

In the next place, the existence of God has been believed in all ages, and in all countries of the world, by Greeks and Barbarians, learned and unlearned. proof of this we may find both in facred and profane authors, that all people have acknowledged fome deity or other, whom they honoured with worship. There is no nation fo wid, fays Cicero +, none fo gro/s, but is persuaded of the existence of the Gods: Many indeed have wrong notions of them, which proceeds from the vitious habit of the mind, but all men do conceive there is a divine power

> * Lucretius Lib. 5. vers. 325. & seqq. But grant the world eternal, grant it knew

Præterea fi nulla fuit genitalis origo Terrarum & cali, semperej, atterna suere; No Infancy, and grant it never new; Cur supra bellum Thebanum & sunera Wby then no Wars our Poets Songs em-

Trojze,
Non alias alii quoque res cecinere poetæ? Beyond the Siege of Thebes, and that of

and [†] Tuscul. quæst. lib. 1. operum pag. m. 1145. edit. Gronovii 1692.

Chap. 1.

and nature. And he makes Velleius the Epicurean fay *, That all the world is firmly persuaded of this truth; that there are neither philosophers, nor ignorant people, but are convinced of it. There is no person, says Ælian+, neither Indian, Gaul, nor Egyptian, nor any Barbarian, who makes any doubt but there are Gods, and that they take care of our affairs. The fecond and feventh chapters of this essay will further prove this point. Indeed we might cite many teltimonies of ancient writers ‡, and a great number of moderns, who have published relations of their voyages to confirm it. The absurd opinions of heathen philosophers or others, concerning the nature of the deity, does not weaken this truth. Many, even learned Men, do neither reason nor act consequentially; we ought not then ascribe to any man the consequence which may be deduced from his Opinion, when he himfelf rejects the same. 'Tis unjust to accuse the philosophers of bare-faced Atheism, since in spite of their impious principles, they professed to believe the existence of a God. Even Epicurus himself, according to Cicero, believed it: What nation, or what kind of man is there, (fays he) who, without being taught, have not some idea of the Gods by way of anticipation; and since this opinion is neither established by precepts, nor by custom, nor by laws, but every man has same innate knowledge of it, the same must necessarily be true ||. And the same orator in another place fays, 'Tis so evident that the Gods are, that the man who denies it, I'll look upon him as a mad man **.

Tho' it be alledged, some whole nations do not discover any knowledge of a deity, nor any sense of religion; yet travellers, who have accused such of atheism, have been contradicted by others, who have enquired better into that affair. Some affert the Castrees in Africa have no religion; but this is denied by Dapper, an accurate author worthy of credit. He maintains these

Bar-

^{*} De nat. Deorum, lib. 1. operum pag. m. 1209.

⁺ Variæ historiæ Lib. 11. Cap. 3.

[‡] Seneca epist. 117.

De natura Deorum, Lib. 1. ubi supra.

^{} De nat. Deorum, Lib. 2. § 45. Esse igitur Deos ita perspicuum est, ut il qui neget vix eum sana mentis existimem.

Barbarians do acknowledge a fupreme Being, whom they call Humma, to whom they pay little or no worship, but when he sends them a good season, or when they complain of a bad one. But tho' there should be such miserable savages, who have little humane but their shape, this is no great honour to the atheists. A small number of monsters makes no exception to the general laws of nature; and the extravagance of some sought not in reason to hinder the belief of a deity from passing for universal.

This universal belief does not proceed from timorousness, as the poet infinuates*: faint-hearted fear does rather incline men to Atheism. I may appeal to the Consciences of atheists; let them tell us fincerely, if it be not the dread of divine judgments that makes them reason against the divine Being, that they may without remorfe indulge their beloved lusts. Neither is ignorance of the causes of events in the world the occasion of this belief. The atheifts themselves can never give any tolerable account of things by the laws of matter and motion, as is already demonstrated; there must be a recourse to a spiritual, intelligent and infinite Being. Nor is it to be ascribed to the policy of princes, who invented this invisible Being, the better to retain people within bounds; for the world was perfuaded of the existence of God, before the foundation of empires, and the establishment of human laws. Princes could not pretend to establish this firmly by their own authority; nor could it obtain univerfally over the minds of all men, by their contrivance. Now, fince 'tis undeniable all people have acknowledged a God; and no less certain, that this belief cannot proceed from the invention of men, we must neceffarily conclude, the only cause is the full and clear evidence of the thing itself. What else could persuade all men, learned and unlearned, of this truth? Even Sadducees, who did not believe a judgment to come, who were not prepoffested with fear; Stoicks, who had the infolence to prefer themselves to God, and applaud their own wisdom; Eticurcans, who alledged God did not concern concern himself in human affairs; heathens who represented their Gods as most vicious and disorderly; and the modern Deists who reject reveal'd religion; do yet all maintain and own this fundamental truth of the existence of God.

^{*} Primus in orbe Deos fecit timor.

To this we shall add, that the Being of God appears also from conscience: the very Heathens have a confcience within, which does fometimes accuse and excuse them, checks and chides them for sin; yea, for fecret fins that are beyond the cognifance of the world. Juvenal, a heathen poet, owns this*. Fears and terrors of conscience in sinners have sometimes arrived at that height, that they would have reckoned it a favour to be out of the world, that they might be free of them. Such terrors are to be found even with the ftoutest sinners, and in men of highest place and power on the earth. The emperor Caligula, when it thundred, fneaked under a bed +. Some do what they can to fmother these fears, while they wallow in fin, and spend their days in carnal jollity; yet there come fudden terrors, which they cannot altogether extinguish: and these are revived, whether they will or not, when the Hand of God is upon them, when alone, or upon the confines of eternity. These things do arise from the secret sense of the fupreme Being; who knows, observes, and will call finners to an account. Every man's conscience is as a thoufand Witnesses to demonstrate to him the Being of a God.

This fundamental truth may be also confirmed from the nature of the human soul. How vast is its capacity, suited to all objects, as the eye is to all colours?

How

— Cur tamen hos ta

Evafisse putes, quos diri conscia facti
Mens habet attonitos, & surdo verbere cadit,
Occultum quatiente animo tortore stagellum?
Pæna autem vehemens, ac multo savior illis,
Quos & Caditius gravis invenit aut Rhadamanthus,
Noste dieque suum gesture in pectore testem.

+ Sueton in Caligula, Cap. 51.

How fwift is its motion? The fun furrounds the world in a day, but the mind can run through the world in a moment, and on a fudden think upon things at a thoufand miles distance. Such a spirit must proceed from a spirit higher than itself. How wonderful is the union of the foul and the body? That fo noble a Being should inhabit a tabernacle of clay, and be linked to it by fuch a strait union: This must be the effect of infinite power. Who but the almighty infinitely wife God, could unite fuch different substances? More particularly, there are in the foul of man infatiable defires after happiness, contentment and satisfaction, which it cannot find in worldly things, and therefore still pursues after some higher happiness, to content and satisfy it for ever. These desires prove there is in the foul fome notion of a perfect Being. proper to make us happy; and indeed if there were no fuch Being, the noblest creature in the world would be the most miserable. Other creatures obtain their ultimate defires, they are filled with good. If there were nothing to fatisfy the vaft defires of the foul of man, he would be in a worse condition than any creature whatsoever.

I might also confirm this truth, from the disposition and preservation of the world, into that beauty and harmony which is so wonderful in it; and the regular exact government of all creatures therein: but I shall soon have occasion to consider this, when discoursing of the providence of God, which will surther demonstrate the truth of his existence.

To conclude, God's existence being so certain, it appears plainly, that atheism is the greatest evil and folly imaginable. 'Tis most irrational, contrary to the stream of universal reason, to the rational dictates of the souls of atheists themselves, and to the testimony of every creature; 'tis most impious. What monstrous impiety is it for wretched men to envy their Creator a Being, without whose goodness they could have had none themselves? 'Tis a thrust at his destruction, saying upon the matter, God is unworthy of a Being. Atheists are worse than heathers; they worshipped many Gods, but these.

the

these, none; they preserved some notion of God in the world, these essay to raze it out. Athesis are someway worse than devils; the demons are under the dread of the eternal Jehovah; they cannot be atheifts in opinion, for they feel the wrath of God tormenting them. Atheism has no footing in hell: 'tis destructive to human fociety, and to all probity and virtue. According to the opinion of these infidels, virtue is but a Chimæra, piety but a vain dream, uprightness no better than hypocrify; a friend may betray another, a citizen ruin his country, a fon assassinate his father, that he may inherit his estate: if he escape the punishment of a civil judge, there is no other thing to be feared. Cicero, that great orator and philosopher, by the light of nature was perfuaded of this of old, (his words are at the foot of the page*:) much more may we be certain of it in our days. To fum up all, atheism is the most dangerous evil; he who denies the Being of God, and feeks to raze all notions of a deity out of his mind, what can he gain by this, but fordid pleasure, unworthy of human nature? And supposing there were no God, which is impossible, what can he lofe, but his fleshly lusts, by firmly believing there is one? There may be a God for aught the Atheist knows, he can never demonstrate the contrary; and if there be, as certainly there is, what a hot receptacle in hell must be referved for these his enemies, who strike at his very Being? Beside, 'tis remarkable that almost no atheist can be named in history, who came not to some fearful and untimely end.

We have now undeniably proved that God is, that he is the only eternal Being, that his existence is necessary, and that he is infinitely perfect; all which attributes are most closely and most inseparably connected together.

And now we shall proceed to prove, and a little to consider some other of the divine perfections: for tho

^{*}Denatura Deorum, lib. 1. § 3, 4. Sunt enim Philosophi, & fuerunt, qui omnino nullam habere censerent humanarum rerum procurationens deos. Duorum si vera sententia est, qua potest esse pietas? qua sanctitas? qua religio?——Atque haud scio, an pietate adversus deos sublatâ, sides étiam, & societas humani generis, &, una excellentissima virtus, justita tollatur.

the most glorious and supreme Being, be the most simple and free from any thing like composition, yet by reason of the weakness and insufficiency of our minds, we poor finite creatures, when we attempt to form a suitable conception of his infinitely persect nature, are obliged to consider those particular ideas, one after another, which make up our general idea of his persections.

This supreme Being must therefore be infinite, and omnipresent, because he is necessary and self-existent; for an absolute necessity has no relation to time or place: whatever therefore exists necessarily, must needs be infinite as well as eternal. A finite Being cannot be felfexistent, for to suppose that, is absurd; for if a Being can, without a contradiction, be absent from one place, it may, without a contradiction, be absent also from another place, and from all places, and fo could not be felf-exiftent: but God's self-existence is already proved, therefore he is infinite and omnipresent. And from hence it follows, that this felf-existent Being must be incorruptible, unchangeable, most fimple and free from all affections of matter for all these things are directly contrary to infinite perfection, and evidently imply, in their notion, a limited finiteness.

Since God exifts of himself, hence it appears he is independent; for if all the power, glory, and perfection God possesses, slow alone from himself, as we must own, when we acknowledge his self-existence, it follows, that his wisdom, power and goodness depend upon none but himself. Hence since God has received nothing, nor borrowed from any, but hath all in and of himself, it follows, that nothing from without can change any thing in his effence or purposes; and since he exists of himself, nothing can limit his persections, they are infinite. He who has received nothing from any, can lose nothing by any extent of time, or changes in it: He is eternal and unchangeable.

Next we observe, that this self-existent infinite Being must be necessarily but one; for to suppose two or more different natures self-existing, necessary and independent, is the same thing in consequence, as saying two absolute infinites; and if we say two, we may say as many as we please:

please: that is to fay, none of them would be really infinite, for infinity is absolute and only. If we suppose two felf-existent independent Beings, either of them may be conceived to exist alone, and so it will be no contradiction to imagine the other not to exist, and consequently neither of them will be necessarily self-existing. Since infinity excludes all limits, we are fure that God is one only, and no more; for two or more infinites involve the greatest contradiction, seeing to suppose two are infinite, is to suppose neither of them are fo; for that were all one as to fay, there were two alls, each of which were all: fo that God, effentially considered, is one only. Plato, Socrates, and some other antient philosophers, in spite of all the prejudices of their education, acknowledged this truth. The multitude of false deities, adored by the heathens, flowed from different causes; they imagined it difficult to ascribe all the virtues in nature to one subject, and therefore attributed every one of them to a particular deity. The intolerable pride of vain men, made them defire to be counted Gods after their death; hence Apotheoses were multiplied; every city, each kingdom and profession must have their own protectors: Ignorant carnal men conceived of God as themselves, to be of different sexes and stations. When nations were at war with one another, they must have different deities for their protectors. The heathens, wanting divine revelation, became thus vain in their imagination; and through a foolish defire to have the object of their adoration before their eyes, they multiplied images, and by degrees conceived the original was also multiplied; and their poets deified all, to pleafe those whose favour they courted, talking of as many gods, as men have inordinate affections. But we know, that fince God necesfarily exists of himself, nothing can be wanting in him; and if nothing be wanting, yea infinitely perfect, he can have no equal nor affiftant: he is therefore the one independent self-existing Being.

Next we observe, that this supreme self-existing Being must be intelligent; for, as has been already proved, motion was not eternal, nor caused by matter, but by

iome

some eternal, immaterial, self-existent and self-active agent; but 'tis impossible for us to have any other idea of this self-active agent, but as a thinking Being; and Thought is inseparable from Intelligence.

This eternal origin of motion is a necessary Being, as is already proved, and therefore he could never have begun motion without a necessary principle of self-determination; for if he had wanted this active principle, he would necessarily ever have remained so. But this self-determining principle implies plainly, that he eternally perceived the power of acting, and the difference of acts; and this perceiving carries necessarily along with it, and directly implies self-consciousness and intelligence.

This truth too might have been demonstrated from the works to be seen in the world, and particularly in man, who is endued with self-consciousness, thought and intelligence, communicated by his Creator. Now, if this self-existent Being were not intelligent, then this perfection in man would be caused by nothing, which is abfurd; for no perfection can be in the effect, which is not in the cause; and 'tis plain, and shall be soon proved, that thought and intelligence cannot be produced by any thing in matter: This self-existent God, who is the author thereof, is then infinitely intelligent.

We come next to observe, that this self-existent Being is endued with a perfect liberty, choice and freedom of action. This is a necessary consequence of his knowledge; for what is intelligence without liberty? 'Tis no perfection at all. Without liberty nothing can be properly faid to be an agent or cause of any thing; for to act neceffarily, is really not to act, but only to be acted upon. If the supreme cause want this freedom, then all things in this world are absolutely necessary in their number, figure, motion, &c. Nothing which is, could possibly have not been; and nothing which is not, could possibly have been. But all this is so absurd, so false, so contrary to the nature of things, and common sense, that it plainly tells us, that God, the cause of all things, is endued with liberty; choice and freedom. The excellent books writby Galen, de usu partium; Mr. Boyle, of final causes; Ray, Derham, &c. and and the discoveries made of late in natural philosophy, may convince any man fully, how every thing in nature exactly suits the end, and is most admirably made for it. But if God were not a free, but a necessary agent, then there could be no such thing as any final cause in the universe; to affert which, is against all sense and reason. I have insisted the longer in proving that these two properties, of intelligence and liberty, belong to the supreme Being, because that there lies the main question between us and the atheists, and particularly with Spinosa and his followers, who build all their strange doctrine of the nature of God, upon the denying of these.

I

Another attribute of this supreme self-existing Being, is omnipotence, a power to do every thing which is not contradictory in itself, or disagreeable to the divine nature. That the supreme Being is endued with this perfection, is undeniable; for, as has been proved, he is the only self-existing Being. All things in the universe are produced by him; they must all depend on him; whatever powers they have must be subjected to him. Nothing therefore can resist his will; he must without hindrance (of necessity) execute it with absolute power where he pleases. Creation and Sustentation may be justly called proper acts of omnipotence: a power which can perform these, may be equally capable to perform any thing else which is not a contradiction.

The next attribute we observe to belong to God, is wisdom; that is, an ability to know the fittest and best method of disposing things in all possible cases, and what are the most proper means to bring about what he thus knows to be meet and fit in the end. The Idea of creation implies wisdom; for omnipotence in a Creator could only produce of itself materials, disorderly rubbish and confused motion. If he had not contrivance and design, he would be below the meanest artificer; but design joined with omnipotence could not be sufficient for the Creator of the universe: for if he were notable to propose the best means for promoting the best ends, (that is wisdom) his defigns and contrivances would be liable to the hazard of some defeat. But the other attributes, we have already Vol. I.

ready demonstrated, do sufficiently prove, that the Deity possesses wisdom: for he is infinite, and every where present; he is intelligent, and therefore being with, and penetrating all things, he must know all things, even the most hidden imaginations of our souls. And as all things are his dependent creatures made by him, and owing their powers and faculties every moment to him, to he must know what at present is done perfectly, and what will ever be done by these his depending creatures. As he must at one view see all the changes and circumstances of things, all their relations one to another, and their fitness to certain ends; so 'tis impossible but he must exactly know what are the best means to promote the best ends. And as he can be hindred by no error or mistake, so having almighty power, he can be kept back by no opposition, from effectuating what is most proper in infinite wisdom to be done. It follows then, that God is infinitely wife, and all things are done by him, throughout the universe, in infinite wisdom. truth too might have been confirmed by a large view and confideration of the works of creation, were this a proper occasion for it. The longer the world continues, and the greater the discoveries are, which are made in the works of nature, this argument grows the stronger. The heavens, the earth, the feas, the body of man, and every thing around us, do particularly discover the confummate perfection, and admirable excellency of their frame, and proclaim aloud the infinite wisdom of their creator.

Lastly, I observe of the supreme Being, that he must necessarily be of infinite justice, truth and goodness, and must be endued with all other moral perfections. This is evident, if we consider, 1st, That as there are different things in the world, so they are placed in different relations and circumstances: there are some things in their own nature suitable and sit to be done, and other things again unsuitable and unsit to be done; and 'tis self-evident, that a guilty criminal and an innocent perfon should not be treated after the same manner. This suitableness seems to be before all positive appointment, and and to have a necessary foundation in the nature of things. 2 dly, Confider that these necessary relations of things appear what they really are to all intelligent Beings, except fuch as understand things to be what they are not. 3dly, By this knowledge of the natural relations of things, the actions of all intelligent Beings are always directed, except their will be corrupted and fwayed by fome unreasonable luft. Therefore, 4thly, The fupreme Being, fince he possesseth infinite knowledge, and knows things always as they exactly are in themselves; since he, being infinitely perfect, can want nothing, and cannot have his will fwayed unreasonably; fince being all-powerful, he must do what he pleaseth, and is limited by none; therefore 'tis evident he must necessarily do what is most fit and suitable to be done, that is, he must always do according to the exact laws of justice, truth, goodness, and all other moral perfections.

Now I go to confider the doctrine of Providence; and because 'tis in a special manner a necessary foundation for all religion, and denied by many modern deists, and some ancient philosophers, I shall therefore more particularly prove and explain it.

By the Providence of God, I understand his immediate providing for the preservation and subsistence of his creatures, and also his disposing and governing of them agreeably to their natures, for the most effectual attaining of his own ends.

That there is fuch a Providence, may be well deduced from what has been already demonstrated: for as to the preservation of creatures, 'tis evident that because they were created, they cannot be of themselves one moment independent. Upon whom therefore must they depend for their preservation? He must certainly be their creator, who is the only independent Being: he must be a Being who is omnipresent with all creatures in the universe: he must be infinitely wise, to know exactly the state and condition of all creatures: he must be perfectly good and benevolent, else he could not preserve all creatures; and he must be all-powerful, else he could not be able for this work.

C 2

work. But these attributes belong only to God, the most perfect Being: And on the other side, if he really has such attributes, he cannot but exert his Providence in the subsistence and preservation of those creatures which he has made.

Epicurus and his followers represent God as regardless of mankind; yea, some have afferted, that 'tis below the Divine Majesty any way to concern himself with any of the creatures whatsover. But the absolutely perfect God is endued with infinite wisdom, and such an almighty power, as can admit of no fainting nor weariness; consequently he must, by his perfect wisdom, equally know, and, by his perfect power, equally be able to preserve and govern all things with equal care as any, and the least as well as the greatest: so that if he do not mind these things, he must be limited and contracted, which is contrary to his infinite nature; his perfections must be denied, and consequently his Being. Besides, what reason have we to judge any thing unworthy of his care, which he himself thought worthy of his creation?

But now we shall proceed in this subject, and make it evident, that as our arguments from reason convince us of such an universal Providence, so experience and observation fufficiently confirm it.

Gravity, as was formerly proved *, is no necessary property of matter; indeed 'tis to the preserving Providence of God alone that we must owe this wonderful effect. Gravity, by which the parts of greater bodies still tend to their respective centers, and the bodies themselves to one another, is the only cement which holds the world together. The motion of many of the great bodies of the heavens, is altogether necessary for the substitute of animals and vegetables; but without gravity, that motion would soon reduce these glorious bodies to an irregular heap of consustion.

It is also to this preserving Providence that we owe the excellent regulation the winds are under. Did not God excite and regulate their motions; did chance only produce them, and put an end to them, the creation would would always be in danger of ruin, the earth would foon come to be a hideous heap or frightful defart, the air would contain nothing but blafting and infection, the fea would be nothing else than a fink of poison and noisomness. Whereas, on the contrary, by the care of Providence, the pestilential steams are dissipated; the feas are preserved wholesome by storms and tempests, and the air is made pleafant and refreshing by seasonable breezes.

It is also to this preserving Providence that we must owe the due proportion between the number of the different fexes and animals. This was necessary in man, and indeed in this case 'tis most remarkable. The proportion is observed to be commonly 14 males to 13 females, or thereabouts; by which overplus in the males, provision is made against the accidents to which that sex is chiefly exposed, as wars, navigations, &c. But without the supposition of a Providence, this admirable equality would have been absolutely unaccountable. If this were not fo provided, the disproportion between the males and females might at fome time or other have been fo great, as very much to diminish, if not intirely to extinguish the whole species.

And further, that there is fuch a Providence, will appear, if we confider the due proportion of the numbers of animals and vegetables, by the equal prevention of their too great increase on the one hand, and destruction on the other. Thus, notwithstanding the great confumption of mankind, by wars, plagues and other accidents, we have good reason to affert, that the number of mankind in every age exceeds that of the former; and which is most remarkable, the increase is in such a gradation, as bears a proportion to the gradual invention of arts, and improvement of the methods of living, as they are discovered. And as to other animals, their propagation is ever proportionable, both to the length of their lives, and the accidents to which they are subject. Thus a doe, which lives long, breeds, after eight months pregnancy, but one, or at most, perhaps two; whereas the fox, which lives much shorter, breeds four in a lesser C_3 time. The like is true of vegetables; by which wonderful uniform course of preserving Providence, the species are preserved, and yet the world not overstocked with inhabitants.

What has been faid regards mostly the Providence of God, as it regards the preservation and subsistence of his creatures: We shall now consider his disposing and governing them.

'Tis in itself most plain, that the supreme perfect God never was indigent of any thing, nor ever could receive the least accession of happiness; consequently the end he proposed in the creating of the world, could not be simply his own good, but also that of his creatures. To obtain this end, his Providence hath wisely appointed these means: 1st, That most exactly regular fabrick of the world: And 2dly, That admirable government of such parts as are surnished with life and action. For I am not now upon the means of restoring fallen man, but upon the works of God, as they may be known by us from the light of nature.

For the first, It is not my design, neither is it proper here, to enlarge upon this subject, which is indeed very agreeable and delightful, and is excellently handled by others. However, I cannot but remark, that 'tis impoffible for any Epicurean, or any enemy to Providence, to account for the present constitution of the world: for tho' it be supposed, that after innumerable ages the matter of the universe, by an internal principle of motion, might have combined into a world, without any fundamental or destructive error in its frame, yet none can imagine but that there would have been many deformities and irregularities; but let any attempt to name one fuch instance, they cannot find it. On the contrary, those things which at first view seem most exceptionable, as rocks, mountains, \mathcal{C}_{c} appear to a diligent observer to have plain marks of being ordered and disposed so by the divine wife Providence. An atheist who can fay, that this world was caused by unintelligent matter without a Providence, may on full as good grounds fay, that the cities of London, Paris, or Edinburgh were made by a chancechance-jumbling of stones without a workman, or that the Books of the wife Solomon, the Iliad of Homer, or the Eneid of Virgil, were made by a chance-jumbling of letters without the direction of men. Indeed this would not be so ridiculous; for more faults may be sound in these towns or books, than in the frame of this glorious world.

Every thing in this prefent fystem is disposed by Providence for the best, nothing whatsoever wants some good use. Often the same thing is disposed for a variety of glorious uses. How many uses have we for the several parts of our bodies? as our hands, eyes, tongue, \mathcal{C}_c . Yea, how many uses has every single muscle, and every bone? yet all these are not absolutely necessary for our fubfistence. Every thing is done in the fittest manner: nothing so well suited to vision as the eye, to operation as the hand, to motion as the foot, or wing. 'Tis unaccountable, without the supposition of a Providence, that fo many different parts should so fitly conspire to one common use, as are the parts which contribute to nutrition and motion in man and other animals. Here is every thing for ornament, but no useless expense. I must stop; but itis plain, that every thing in the frame of the world is so complete, that the wit of man is not capable of making the least improvement, and that all was disposed by divine Providence.

The other mean appointed by Providence for obtaining the end of creation, is, that admirable government of such parts as are furnished with life and action. This is different according to the diversity of its subjects, which are either rational or irrational. As to the latter, if we view the actions of brute beasts in general, we cannot say they are meer machines, doing only according to external impressions; for the actions of the meanest of them are wonderfully diversified. So that if we look to an ant-hill or bee-hive, we shall find them as differently employed as the inhabitants of a city, tho' they are at the same time beset with the same objects, and for aught appears, receive the same impressions from without. But as the actions of brutes are not the effects of mere mechanism, so they cannot proceed from reason and liberty, as those of men, nor can they obey any moral law. Yet herein is the wise Providence of God manifested, that he has implanted in those creatures such an uniform principle of action, call it by what name you will, as directly tends to the advancing this end, the universal welfare of his creatures. But I cannot enlarge on this head: I hope here it appears there is a governing Providence.

The method of governing the rational world, is by laws; the foundation of this government is the absolute propriety of the creator in his creatures, antecedent to confent or contract; its original rule and standard is the nature and will of the governour, the supreme perfection of his wisdom, which cannot but immutably incline him to act in conformity to the states and capacities of his subjects, and to that original fitness and unfitness which is in the natures and circumstances of things. That there really is fuch a government, appears from this, that there are certain uniform dictates of reason, with reference to matters of highest concern to the welfare of intelligent creatures, of which every fuch creature, acting like himself, cannot be ignorant. These dictates are qualified to be a rule of the actions of creatures; but whatever appears qualified to be a rule of actions, can be no other than a law with reference to the defign of the creator. Reason and liberty are the two principal necessary qualifications in the subjects of this government; without the former they cannot know their duty, and without the latter they cannot discharge it: without either in a sufficient degree, government by laws would be ridiculous. With both in a due perfection, they found in creatures an immediate obligation to obey their creator; and from this obligation arises the supposition of rewards and punishments, and of justice in proportioning and dispensing them by the supreme creator and governour.

If there were not such a Providence in the world, what dismal work would there be? Man would become more mischievous than the brutes; all vertues would degenerate into the contrary vices, or self-love. All men would be tyrants to the inferiour creatures; and so far as it were in their power, and for their interest, would be so to one another: in a word, every thing would tend to a state of war, consustion and destruction.

Chap. I. Of the Providence of GOD.

From all which it follows, that it would be unfuitable to the divine wisdom, and consequently impossible not to have such a government; that 'tis necessary to the good of the creatures, and to the glory of the creator; that there must be an equal and just distribution of rewards and punishments by the law-giver to the subjects, if not in this life, yet in a future state. In a word, that God by his Providence preserveth, disposeth and governeth all his creatures agreeably to their natures, for attaining the best ends.

Add to all this, the very wifest of the heathens acknowledged this divine Providence; the Emperor Mark Antonin fays *, If there be no Gods, or if they take no care of human affairs, to what purpose do we live in the world, empty of God and his Providence? Cicero, that great orator and philosopher, expresses himself thus: I affert, that by the Providence of the Gods, the world and all its parts were made at the beginning, and are always governed. This dispute we divide in three parts, whereof the first is to prove the existence of the Gods, which being confessed, we must also acknowledge that the world is guided by their administration +. Does not Providence make itself fensible even to the most impious? We see in all histories and revolutions of states and kingdoms, so surprising and fo unexpected turns of affairs, that the ablest politicians could not account for. The most fecret crimes have been often strangely discovered; our life has been exposed to fo many dangers, in all appearance, unavoidable, from which it has been delivered by unforfeen means; the afflictions that have been very grievous to us, have terminated terminated to our advantage; fo as we cannot but in all these, and on many other occasions observe the visible tokens of the power, justice, and goodness of God, who holds all creatures in his own hand, and governs them according to his pleasure.

^{*} Ei π ຮັນ ຕໍ່ສານ, ທີ່ ຮໍ μ έλει αυτοῖς τ ῶν ανθςωπέων, πὶ μοι ζ κν κόσμω κενῷ Θεῶν, ἢ ως ενοίας κενῷ. Marcus Antoninus ἔς ἑαυτὸν. Lib. 2. §. 11.

[†] Dico igitur providentià deorum mundum, & omneis mundi parteis & initio constitutas esse, & omni tempore administrari: eamque disputationem treis in parteis nostri ferè dividunt: quarum pars prima est, qua ducitur ab ea ratione, qua docet esse Deos, quo consesso, consitendum est corum consilio mundum administrari. Cicero de natura Deorum, L. 2. C. 2.

There have been, and still are many objections and difficulties started against this doctrine of Providence. I cannot now stay to discourse of the origin of evil, the liberty of man, and to vindicate the attributes of God, in his dispensations of Providence: In short, if there be any thing at all in these which we cannot fully account for, it must arise from the weakness of our poor finite minds, which cannot comprehend the ways of the infinite God. 'Tis impossible that there can be any real irregularity in divine Providence; and a proper time will come, when we shall be convinced, and all his dispensations will appear to be what they really and certainly are, just and righteous altogether.

I now proceed to another great fundamental article of Religion, the Immortality of the Soul. There are no subjects on which we can turn our thoughts, capable to afford us more pleasure, advantage and delight, than those which concern our Souls; and of all such subjects, none concern us more nearly, nor are more capable to advance so valuable ends, than that of our Immortality. This then very well deserves the strict and accurate enquiry of every one of us.

There are feveral fources from whence we might derive many strong arguments to convince us and all men, that our Souls are immortal: I shall a little argue from these following.

First, The Soul is immaterial, therefore 'tis immortal. That the first of these propositions is true, might be proved by a long chain of reasoning *; but I shall only prove briefly, that if the Soul were not immaterial, it would be absurd to suppose any variety or diversity of thought, or any inserence or argumentation in our mind. Because, supposing our Souls to be made up of material particles, all our thoughts must arise from the motion of these particles; that is, for every change of thought, there must be a change in the number of moving particles, in the direction, or in the quantity of their motion: for 'tis evident, that a cause working still the fame way, would still produce the fame effect, and our thought would be always the very fame, if some change or other did not happen in these parts of matter. But by the hypothesis we oppose, this change must be caused by the impulse of some foreign matter; there must therefore be some prior Mover to that, for 'tis plain that matter cannot change its state of rest into that of motion by itself, and another prior to the former, and so by an infinite progression: and this must be the case in every individual act of reasoning, on the very least change of thought; which is so contrary to all true philosophy and common sense, that it cannot be endured. The foul therefore is immaterial.

^{*} See Ditton on the Resurrection, Pag. 489, &c. Appendix. Dr. Samuel Clark's Letters to Mr. Dodwell.

Now that the Immateriality of the Soul does prove its Immortality, may appear, if we confider, First, That our fouls and bodies being of quite different and oppofite natures, however closely they may be united, can never fuffer any mixture or confusion among themselves. 2dly, That the foul being of a fimple incorporeal fubstance, is not at all capable of a dissolution. 3dly, That when the foul and body are difunited, the first of these is not diffolved; nor is there the least shadow of reason to imagine that its being and activity is any way tied to the being and regular condition of the body. But, 4tbly, That on the contrary, we have reason to think, that as our Soul in its state of union, was always most noble and elevated, when it had least to do with, and was most abstracted from the body; so now after its separation, being free from all these clogs and bodily indispositions, which less or more still attend it, during its union; in this case we may justly think, that all its actions and thoughts will be exerted with far more freedom and fprightliness than when it was joined to the body. It is then certain the Soul is immortal, for that neither the body nor any of the laws of matter can have any influence to the contrary. 2 dly,

2 dly, That the Soul is immortal, may be demonstrated from the passions and sentiments of our souls: 1 am perfuaded, fays Cicero *, by the quickness of thought, with which the Soul is endued, its wonderful memory of things past, and foresight of things to come, it has invented so many arts, so many sciences, and has made so many admirable discoveries, that it cannot be but immortal. This Soul cannot fatisfy itself with earthly enjoyments, its love of existence is exceeding strong, it shuns the thoughts of annihilation with horror, and with the most eager inclinations aspires after Immortality. That the Soul is endued with fuch fentiments, is so evident, that I think it would be superfluous in me to prove it. I am confident this truth can run no risque, if I should by open appeal leave the confirmation of it to the consciences of men; to men, I say, who are not either prodigiously inconsiderate, unattentive, and so most stupidly ignorant, who are not quite missed by early, strong and foolish prejudices; or above all, who are not so entirely depraved by vicious habits, fo wholly corrupted by debauched practices, that they either cannot, will not, or dare not think freely and calmly. Such people indeed are not to be dealt with, and I dare fay all others both perceive well the forefaid fentiments, and will as freely own them.

Now, to prove the Immortality of the Soul from these its passions and sentiments, we must consider that the infinitely perfect Being, the Creator of all things, and particularly of man, has done all things wisely and well; the very brute beasts have a happiness proportioned to their faculties, they have the means, and actually obtain the enjoyment of those things to which their natural desires, planted in them by their Creator, strongly incline them: And therefore, if our Souls were not immortal, men would be on this account more miserable than brutes, in that they had not a happiness proportioned to their faculties, and could have no possible way to come at the enjoyment of those strong and ardent defires, so deeply fixed in them by their Creator. Yea, I may add, that if we suppose the Soul not to be immortal, then the more excellent any one man were among the human kind, the more fagacious, just, wife, &c. fo much more would he be miserable, and so much less incapable of happiness, because he would be the more fensible of his death, which so fast approaches; and this would four all his prefent fenfible happiness. The more wife he were, he would not only be more fenfible of the shortness and uncertainty of his life, but of the poorness, insufficiency, and distatisfactoriness of all such pitiful delights, fince 'tis certain that a fool fets a greater value on fensible happiness, than a wife man; and so would be most, if not the only person, capable of true happiness. These things may persuade us of many ab-furd consequences of afferting the Soul to be a mortal perishing substance. Indeed the vast capacity of the Soul of man to recall things past, foresee things to come, and in a manner to give being to things that are not, to raise up itself to the heavens, and pant after them; descend to the abyss, and sound the depth thereof; and tho' chained to a languishing body, yet to aspire after Immortality, may convince any man of the heavenly original of the Soul, that 'tis not formed to perish with a vile lump of matter, whose duration is so short and miserable, but is immortal, and endureth for ever.

Thirdly, The doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul, and confequently of its being capable to receive rewards and punishments in the life to come, is most profitable to the right government of men's lives and actions in the world, and the preserving society among them. If no happiness or misery is to be expected hereafter, then the only business men have to take care of, is their present well-being in the world: If a man be inclined to make gain, if he can cheat or steal, so as not to be punished by a civil or criminal judge; it will be so far from being his fault, that 'tis plainly his duty, because 'tis a proper mean to increase his plenty and opulent estate. And as to anger, hatred, revenge, or the like lusts, by this principle a man may take the first opportunity of satisfying these passions, by doing mischief to the person he is offended with, either by accusation, perjury, poisoning or stabbing, if he can do it, so as to escape the suspicion of others, and human penalties. What tygers, wolves, monsters in human shape would men be, if they might thus gratify their impetuous lusts, as oft as they could do it safely? The atheists themfelves, while they own Religion is a politick invention, necessary for the right government of the world, grant the excellency of it, tho' they pretend otherwise; yet they are not so far out of their wits as to defire their wives, children or fervants should be of the same opinion with them, for then they could have no fecurity for their estate, honour or life. If any imagine the principle of honour may supply the room of conscience; I answer, this relates only to external reputation, and the esteem we have among others, and therefore can be of no influence to restrain men from secret mischief. God hath then in great wifdom added everlafting rewards to good men, and punishments to the wicked, as fanctions to his law, to influence men to obedience, from a tender regard to the good of their immortal fouls.

Fourthly, The very heathens believed the Immortality of the Soul. Seneca expressly asserts it: * We prove, says he, the Being of Gods from this among other arguments, that all people are of this opinion: there is no nation so rude without laws and manners, but they believe there are some Gods: when we dispute about the eternity or immortality of the soul, the general consent of men either fearing or worshipting the insernal powers, is of no small moment to us. Cicero says †, We do believe that the souls of men do abide after death, by the consent of all nations. Both these eminent authors connect the doctrine of the Soul's Immortality with that of the existence of God, the one

+ Tusc. quæst. lib. 1. cap. 16. Sed ut deos esse natura opinamur-

Sic permanere animos arbitramur consensu nationum omnium.

^{*} Seneca Epist. 117. non longè ab initio. Deos esse, inter alia sic colligimus, quòd omnibus de diis opinio insita est: nec ulla gens usquam est adeò extra leges moresque projecta, ut non aliquos deos credat. Cum de animarum aternitate disserimus, non leve momentum apud nos habet consensus hominum, aut timentium inseros, aut colentium.

one depending upon the other; and affirm all nations are of this opinion. Many other testimonies may be cited from the Greek philosophers and poets, to the same purpose, which the curious may find quoted by Justin Martyr, Clemens of Alexandria, and other ancient sathers. I do not here stay upon them, since the Immortality of the Soul we affert, appears evident and necessary from the arguments already adduced. And,

Fifthly, From the folid hopes good men have of future happiness: hence they have with a more than heroick courage endured the forest sufferings and most cruel deaths, for adhering to Religion, which does suppose, and is founded upon a strong persuasion of happiness in a future state, where their sufferings shall be rewarded with an eternal weight of glory; which hope shall not be in vain. On the other hand, wicked men, even tho' grandees in this earth, who did command armies, and gave laws to nations, cannot avoid the lashes of conscience, the terrors and fears of judgment and eternal mifery to come. There is no creature below man that has any fears of this kind. If there be no real ground for these hopes or fears, it must follow, that God, who has framed all his other works fo well for the end to which they are defigned, did so contrive the nature of man, as to be a needless torment and burden to it self. If these impresfions did flow only from education, the pains, a mocking atheistical generation takes, might be sufficient to extirpate them; but the contrary is found by experience. Our Creator has fo engraven these truths upon the souls of men, as the impression can never be altogether razed out.

Lastly, The nature of the supreme Being, his wisdom, goodness and truth, affords the most undeniable arguments for the Soul's Immortality; but, to avoid prolixity and repetitions, I shall only lightly touch them. I say then, if the Soul of man were mortal, it would derogate mightily from the wisdom of God, to have made it with such unsuitable faculties as these it hath would be, were the Soul a perishing transient creature: this would argue more want of skill in God than is to be discerned in any good human artift, who is always fure to make his piece of workmanship suitable to the duration he defigns it should have, and the sphere of activity he is to place it in. But 'tis evident, that the faculties of brute beafts are vastly inferior to those of the human Soul: what therefore is common to the beafts, as well as man, cannot be the end of man. The wisdom of God then must certainly suffer, if, as he appoints man to an end of his own defigning, fo he did not appoint him an end answerable to the excellency of his soul: an end as much above other creatures, as that exceeds them in worth and excellency, as was before hinted. But if our doctrine were false, we might not only impeach God's want of wisdom in making man, but also in his government of the world. What wife governour would allow, or, I may fay, authorife fuch things, as would certainly breed the most horrid confusion in the government? And if God had made man to perish, foul and body, what destruction, disorder and ruin would not have naturally followed throughout all the world? No restraint, no bonds would have been on men. Or if a way can be found to defend his wisdom, how much must his goodness suffer, in having misled men, through all ages, in fuch a gross error, in having so deeply rooted in their minds the above-named idle, groundless, tormenting paffions, in having perfuaded many, by an invincible error, to a great deal of troublesome things, from the hopes of a reward after death, and in having hindred them from doing many things pleasant and grateful to their inclinations, from the fears of a punishment after death; and yet these hopes and sears must be mere deluding sancies. Or if we wrongfully accuse his goodness, how shall his truth and justice be faved? Shall good men, who to their inexpreffible lofs obeyed his laws, know of no reward after death? Shall all those promises which he made mankind rely on as Truth itself, be found to be nothing but deceit, cousenage and falshood? Shall all that justice, for which he made himself so famous, be at length discovered to be the basest treachery, iniquity and injustice? No, no; away with with fuch blasphemous contradictions! Let us believe after the old, sure, demonstrated way, that God is most perfectly and superlatively wise, good, just and true; and, as is firmly demonstrated by this and the preceding arguments, that the souls of men are immortal.

Chap. 1. The Duties of Religion.

3

The great Principles of Religion, the Existence, the Attributes, and the Providence of God, with the Immortality of the Soul, being thus demonstrated; the Duties incumbent on men do shine by a native consequence. The more general duties are, praise, thanksgiving, trust and prayer. Since God is our fovereign, infinitely perfect, who has made us, who has given us all we have, who can still do us good, supply all our necessities and wants, relieve us in all our troubles, and crown us with all the bleffings of his goodness; 'tis highly reasonable we should admire his liberality, trust in his mercy, pray to him for what we need, and give thanks to him for what we receive. Even a heathen could fay, The nature of God may justly challenge the worship of men, because of his excellency, blessedness and eternity; for whatsoever excels, has upon that account a veneration due to it *. There are feveral particular actions and fervices, which, by the light of nature and the consent of nations, have been proper to express the honour due to him; as setting apart particular persons, places and times for his worship. It has been the general practice of all nations to have among them a diftinct office of men, fet apart and confecrated to officiate in holy things, to affift the people in their publick worship, to instruct them in the doctrine and practice of religion, and to excite them to the performance of religious duties. Reason tells us, fuch men are like to have the greatest skill, who have made it their business and chief care, who are obliged to it by their office. 'Tis reasonable for men who are joined in civil focieties, to join also for religious worship. order to this, 'tis necessary there should be publick places and folemn times dedicated for fuch affemblies, which has been the practice of all civilized nations; and all this ought to be done with great submission and reverence.

VOL. I.

^{*} Cicero de natura Deorum, Lib. 1. §. 45. —— Nam & praslans Deorum natura hominum pietate coleretur, cum & aterna esset & b.atissima, habet enim venerationem justam quicquid excellit.

The divine perfections do also discover what honour and service is due to God from his creatures. 'Tis necessary, in our present state, we should have something to depend upon, and have recourse to, for support and relief: man, at his best estate, being but a feeble and infirm creature, by reason of the weakness of his mind and disorder of his passions, 'tis folly to trust in himself; and 'tis no less to trust in creatures, which are so uncertain in their events, and so changeable in their dispositions. But seeing the glorious God perfectly understands our weakness, and all the proper remedies; since he is of such unquestionable goodness, love and saithfulness, to be concerned for us, and take care of us, of infinite power to relieve us in every condition, and everlasting, to be useful to us and our posterity in all generations: he is the only proper object of our trust and dependence.

Our love is also due to this God, to love his laws, his people, his worship, his precepts and commands, to esteem him and seek after him as our only happiness; since he is good in himself, the original of all good in the world, and good unto us, the author of our Being and Well-being. 'Tis also reasonable we should reverence and fear his name; that we have a humble and awful regard to his divine majesty, slowing from esteem and love to him, so as to be unwilling to do any thing which will argue a contempt of him, or provoke and offend him, but careful to do every thing that may please him. His sovereignty and dominion over us do claim our willing subjection to his laws, our observance of them, and conformity to them in our lives, with a patient submission to what he carves out for us.

Not only may the duties of piety toward God be deduced from those great principles of religion formerly demonstrated, but also the duties we owe to our fellow-creatures, creatures, and to our felves, called righteoufness and fobriety.

It has already been made evident, that God acts always according to the strictest equity, justice, goodness and truth, that is suitable to his own nature; and according to the eternal reason of things, 'tis impossible for him to be deceived or prejudiced. These creatures of his therefore, on whom he has bestowed liberty and reason, intolerably abuse these his gifts, when they either negligently fuffer themselves to be deceived, or wilfully prejudiced in matters of good and evil, and so act contrary to God, and to those noble faculties he has endued them with, which will tend to their own hurt and ruin. Now, justice and equity to every man, to deal with him, as we in the like case would reasonably expect he would deal with us, is fo plainly fit and reasonable in itself, that he who denies it, or acts contrary thereunto, most unaccountably abuses reason, acts contrary to his noble faculties, contrary to God, who, as he is perfectly just himself, cannot but abhor and punish all iniquity and injustice in reasonable creatures.

Universal love and benevolence to all men, is also a duty which flows from the same principles; for as God is just, so he is perfectly good, and always does what is best in the whole: so reasonable creatures ought to do not only what is fit and just, but also they ought to endeavour to do what is the greatest good; this must still be the most reasonable to be done. Now that love and benevolence, or a constant endeavour to promote the universal welfare of all men, is what most resembles and best pleaseth God, and is the greatest good we can do in our sphere, is so evident, that none can deny it, or be guilty of the contrary in practice, who has not his reasonable faculties most prodigiously and unnaturally corrupted.

Then, as to the duties we owe with respect to ourselves, 'tis clear that we ought to preserve our Being as long as we can; for we can have no just power or right to destroy what is God's work and gift: he alone has appointed us our work, and he only knows when it will be ended; and D 2 therefore therefore he only can difinifs us when all that work is done which he ordered for us. The Apology of Mr. Gildon, for Blount's abominable practice *, ought then to be hiss'd out of the rational world: and as we are like foldiers, who cannot quit our posts when we please, so we must always keep ourselves in a condition fit for performing the duties of our flations; and therefore we must do what we can to keep our reasonable faculties in good order, to regulate our passions and restrain our appetites, to keep free from all intemperance, either in body or mind: for when we are in fuch a condition, we are unfit for performing the necessary duties of life to which God calls us; and we are not fecure, but that we may be led into the commission of all forts of sins against God and our neighbours. We must therefore in a special manner take care to practise these duties, to preserve our Being as long as we are able, to keep ourfelves always in a condition fit for our work, and to be diligent and fatisfied in that particular station in which holy and wife Providence has placed us.

Tho' from the light of nature, especially after it has been cleared up to us by divine revelation, and improved by education, we may deduce such consequences, as have been already insisted upon; yet natural religion, without the help of divine revelation, can never conduct men to eternal happiness: in order to satisfy ourselves in this point, we must look mainly into the writings of those, who never had the benefit of divine revelation. The account we shall give, in the sequel of this book, of the state of idolatry among the Gentiles, and the best notions their religion furnished them with, for the fervice of God, may demonstrate this. But to prove the infufficiency of natural religion, and the necessity of divine revelation, I shall offer the following considerations; and I may be excused if I stay a little upon them, because they may be of use to us in the following part of this effay, to discover the vanity of heathenism, and the unspeakable advantages we have by divine revelation.

First,

First, Religion does import that veneration or regard which is due from the rational creature, in the whole course of his life, to the supereminently excellent Being, his Creator, Preserver, Lord, and Benefactor *. This veneration must be upon the account of his supereminent excellencies, his absolute and independent sovereignty, his creation, preservation, and other benefits bestowed upon us; we must love him with a love superior to that we give to any creature. Would our king be pleased, if we paid him no more respect than we do his fervant? In order then to ferve God acceptably, we must have a distinct and particular knowledge of him. To engage me to trust in God, I must know his power, be persuaded that he knows, and is willing to take care of me. To engage me to pray to him, I must be perfuaded of his omniscience to know my defires, and of his ability and willingness to supply my wants. To engage me to love him, I must know the amiableness of his perfections; and to pay him obedience, I must know his authority, and the laws that are to be the rule of my actions. Now the heathens, by the dark light of nature, had no fuch knowledge of God: they could scarce spell out his name, by the works of creation and providence, without revelation. To be fure the vulgar could not do it, when their greatest philosophers were so grofly ignorant in these matters. 'Tis amazing that they, who were such giants in all other kinds of learning, should prove such dwarfs in divinity, that they might go to school to get a lesson from the most ignorant Christians, who knew any thing at all. Justly said the Apostle Paul, in wisdom they knew not God; their knowledge was plain ignorance. Cicero, who collected the opinions of other philosophers, in his books, De natura Deorum, as of Thales, Socrates, Solon, Protagoras, Diagoras, &c. fays +, Those who affert the Being of the Gods, run into such a variety and difference of opinions, that is troublesome to report: they say so many different things, of the shapes of the Gods, of their places, seats and actions; of their lives, (about which there is great dissension amongst philosophers) and which touches the point more nearly, some of them affirm the Gods do nothing, are free of all government and care of affairs: Others, that all things were made from the beginning, and regulated and moved for an infinite time. What mis-shapen notions are these? Beside, an endless variety of opinions, whereby they fay and unfay, are wavering and uncertain, Cicero himself never adventured to give any methodical account; he scarce establishes any thing, but spends his whole time in resuting the opinions of others, without daring to advance his own. Have you forget, fays he *, what I told you in the beginning, that 'tis easier for me to tell you what is not my opinion, than what it is. The best theology of the heathen fages is but dark hints, which the vulgar did not understand. Scarce any of them is positive, that there are no more Gods than one. Even Socrates himself, who is supposed to have died a martyr to this truth, durst not own it plainly. While this is undetermined, all religion is left loose and uncertain, and men cannot know how to distribute their veneration to several deities.

* Haliburton's Natural Religion insufficient, Pag. 45.

⁺ De natura Deorum, Lib. 1. S. 2. Oni vero Deos esse dixernnt tanta sunt in varietate ac dissensione, &c.

Secondly, The light of nature is infufficient to direct us in the worship of God, which consists not only in the acts of the mind, as esteem, fear, love, but in a more stated and solemn way of veneration. Mankind, as united in societies, depends intirely upon God, and therefore owe him reverence, and all suitable expressions of it. Publick benefits require publick acknowledgments; the deists themselves own this. Now the nations that were lest to the mere light of nature, were filled with blasphemous, ridiculous and unworthy rites of worship; yea, some of them were impious and abominable, as we may see afterward, in the second chapter of this essay. We cannot any where in the heathen world see any worship that is not manifestly unworthy of, and injurious to the glory of God. That light light that suffered the world so far to lose their way, must be sadly desective. What did they know about either the matter or manner of prayer or praises? What security did, or could nature's light afford of the fuccess and acceptance of these duties? Plato, in his second Alcibiades, makes it his business to prove that we know not how to manage Prayer, and therefore concludes it fafer to abstain altogether, than err in the manner of performance. Epictetus says, Every one must sacrifice and offer the first-fruits according to the manner of their country *. Seneca condemns this, and fays, Deum colit qui novit, let those that know God worship him +. Remarkable is the confession of Jamblicus, a Platonick philosopher in the first century $; 'Tis not easy to know what God will be pleafed with, unless we be either immediately instructed by God ourselves, or taught by some person God has conversed with, or arrive at the knowledge of it by some divine means or other. If these great men were in so great uncertainty, what was the case of the rest of the pagan world?

^{*} Idem ibid. Lib. 2. S. 2. Oblitus es, quod initio dixerim, facilius me, talibus prasertim de rebus, quid non sentirem, qu'am quid sentirem, posse dicere?

Thirdly, Nature's light is not able to give any discovery wherein man's chief happiness consists, or how it is attainable. The Gentile philosophers have split upon this point, into an endless variety of opinions; Varro reckons no less than 288. If the discoveries of nature's light were fufficient to happiness, there could be no longer fuch contention and difference about the chief good; every man might know and rest satisfied with it. Such a confusion of opinions is a certain argument of darkness. The Epicureans placed the chief good in pleasure; Solon, in the enjoyment of outward things; Socrates, in knowledge; Zeno, in living according to nature. The Epicurean opinion encouraged fenfuality; and no wonder, for tho' they granted the Being of God, yet they denied his Providence, which does restrain vice, and encourage virtue. The Stoicks, tho' they granted a divine Providence, yet they maintained such a fatal necessity, not only in the effects of human actions, but in the actions themselves, as there-thereby they blunted the edge of all virtuous endeavours, and made an excuse for vitious practices. 'Tis evident none of these people knew that happiness consists in the eternal enjoyment of God. If we were to expect such a discovery among the heathens, we might look for it among those who have not by the by, but as their main purpole, discoursed of moral philosophy, and the ends of human life, as Cicero and Seneca. Cicero tells us *, he defigned to enrich his native country with a translation of what is most valuable in the Greek philosophers. With this design he sets himself to write, de finibus bonorum & malorum, of moral ends good or evil, in five books. Here we might expect to find wherein man's happiness does confift; but if we do, we are disappointed. The first book fets off Epicurus's opinion about happiness with a great deal of rhetorick. The second overthrows it, shewing our felicity does not confift in pleasure. The third reprefents the Stoicks opinion. The fourth confutes it. The fifth represents and afferts the Peripateticks opinion, which had been as eafily confuted as any of the rest. And this is all we are to expect from Cicero, without one word of God, or of the life to come. Seneca writes a book de vita beata, of a happy life, in 32 chapters; from his state of the question we might expect great matters: Let us enquire, says he +, what is best to be done, not what is most customary; what will bring us to the possession of eternal happiness, not what is approved by the vulgar, the worst interpreter of truth. But after this, I affire you, you need look for no more words of Eternity, but only a jejune discourse, with some pretty sentences about the Stoicks opinion, that a man would be happy if his passions were extinct, and were perfectly pleased with the condition he is in, be what it will. Yea, he commends Diodorus, the Epicurean, who killed himself, saying t, This happy man, full of a good conscience, gave a testimony to himself when dying. After this, can we dream that nature's light is sufficient to discover the way to true happiness? Can the ^{*} De finibus, lib. 1. ab initio.

^{*} Enchiridion, cap. 38. pag. m. 56. † Epist. 95. pag. m. 228. ‡ De vita Pythagoræ, cap. 28.

⁺ De vita beata, cap. 2.

[#] Ibidem, cap. 19. operum pag. m. 351.

the vulgar fort of people discover that which the greatest philosophers, after the most serious application, failed to do? 'Tis true, Plato and Cicero have given fuch arguments for the immortality of the foul, as the atheifts cannot answer; yet when compared with the performances of Christian writers, they are but like the trisles of a boy at school, laid in the ballance with the elaborate performances of great masters. Their arguments did rather beget a suspicion than a firm and steady belief, as the ingenuous auditor in Cicero acknowledges *; While I read the arguments of Plato, I affent, fays he; but when I lay by the book, and think with myself of the immortality of the foul, I know not how this affent all vanishes. But ftill they had no discovery of the nature of the happiness of immortal fouls, wherein it confifts, or of its excellency and fuitableness, to engage men to defire and pur-fue after it as the chief good: No view of the glorious recompense of reward, of the everlatting enjoyment of our Redeemer, and finging his praises in glory, as we Christians have by the invaluable advantage of divine revelation.

In the fourth place, As the Light of nature cannot difcover our happiness, so neither does it clear up the way that leads to it. It cannot be a complete directory to guide a man in the way of holiness, and bring him to everlasting life. Mr. Locke has well discoursed the point, in his Reasonableness of Christianity, as delivered in the Scriptures +: So much virtue as was necessary to hold societies together, and to contribute to the quiet of the governments, the civil laws of common-wealths taught, and forced on men who livedunder magistracy; but these laws being for the most part made by such, who had no other aim but their oven power, reached no further than those things that would tie men together, or conduce to the temporal prosperity of the people. But natural religion, in its full extent, was nowhere, that I know, taken care of by the force of natural reason; it should seem by the little that has been hitherto done, 'tis too hard for unassisted reason to establish morality in allits parts, upon its true foundation, with a clear and convincing light. It would be a difficult task to gather the scattered shreads of the heathen moralists into a body; but tho' it were done, it would not be a fystem any way useful to mankind. It would consist for most part of enigmatical, dark and involved fentences, that would need a commentary too large to peruse, to make them intelligible. Of what use would it be to read such morality as the sayings of Pythagoras? Poke not the fire with a fword: Stride not over the beam of a ballance: Eat not the beart: Carry not the image of God about with you in a ring*. Many of the fayings of philosophers, recorded by Diogenes Laertius, are of the same kind. The pagan morality is very defective, many necessary duties are wanting; it never teaches the duty of self-denial, to subject all our concerns to the honour of God, and to depend upon him alone for affiftance, and acceptance in our best performances. Nature's light does not direct us to forgive our enemies, to love them and pray for them; does not regulate our thoughts, designs, and the frame of our soul. These things go above the view of unenlightned nature; we are obliged to divine relation for the discovery of them.

^{*} Tusc. Quæst. lib. 1. \(\). 25. + Pag. 268.

The heathen morality is not only defective and lame, but also corrupt and pernicious. Epistetus bids you † temporise, and worship the Gods after the fashion of your country. Pythagoras ‡ forbids you to pray to God, because you know not what is convenient. Cicero defends Brutus and Cassius for killing Julius Casar, and thus authorises the murder of supreme magistrates, if the actors can persuade themselves they are tyrants: thus no prince could be secure either of his crown or dignity. We may find Plutarch commending Cato Uticensis for killing himself amidst philosophick thoughts, with resolution and deliberation, after reading Plato on the immortality of the souls. Cicero pleads for self-murder; herein he was seconded by Brutus, ^{*} Diogenes Laertius's Life of Pythagoras. † Enchiridion, cap. 38. pag. m. 56.

[#] Diog. Laertius.

Plutarch's Life of Cato, near the End,

Brutus, Cassius, Seneca and others: these practised it; many of their learned men applauded their opinion and practice. The modern deists justify it, in the presace to Blount's oracles of reason. Seneca pleads for it thus : If thy mind be melancholly and in misery, thou mayst put a period to this wretched condition; wherever thou lookest, there is an end to it: see that precipice, there thou mayst have liberty; seest thou that sea, that river, that well? liberty is at the bottom of it: that little tree? freedom hangs upon it. Thy own neck, thy own throat may be a refuge to thee from such fervitude, yea, every vein of thy body. Ah wretched morality! we may find in the heathen philosophers customary swearing commended, if not by their precepts, yet by the examples of their best moralists, Plato, Socrates, Seneca and Julian the Emperor, in whose works numerous instances of oaths, by Jupiter, Hercules, the Sun, Sera-pis, and the like, do occur. In the same manner we may fee the unnatural love of boys recommended. Aristotle practifed it, and Socrates is wronged, if he was not guilty of the same; hence came the proverb of Socratici Cinædi in Juvenal's days †. Lucian makes no secret of it t, yea in his discourse, entitled ερώτες ||, we have a long discourse of one Callicratidas, vindicating and commending this infamous love, as more becoming a philosophick mind; infinuating it was the common practice of Greek philosophers, and permitted to them. What abominable opinions are these of Aristippus ? That he did not think it rational that a virtuous man should hazard himself for his country; for it was not fit that he should throw away bis prudence for the folly and miscarriages of others; beside, the whole world is his country. That it was lawful for a wise man to steal, commit adultery, and sacrilege, when opportunity offered; for that none of these actions were naturally evil, setting aside the vulgar opinion, which was introduced into the world by filly and illiterate people. That a wife ^{} De Ira, lib. 3. cap, 15. pag. m. 319.

[†] Juvenal. Satyr. 2. ver. 10. ‡ Luciani opera, vitarum initio, Tom. 1. pag. m. 379. παιδεςας ης εμμ σύσος τὰ έρωπχὰ.

Luciani amores, operum Tom. 1. pag. m. 895. & feqq.

Diog. Laertius, Vol. 1. pag. m. 165, 166.

man might publickly, without shame or scandal, keep company with common harlots, if his inclinations led him to it. May not a heautiful woman he made use of, he cause she is fair; or a youth, he cause he is lovely? Certainly they may, says he. No wonder the heathen world was debauched, when the philosophers, the oracles of those times, taught them such impious lessons.

Pride and Self-esteem were among the virtues, which rendred their best morality unsavoury. Seneca says *, Let a man be pure, not overcome by any external accidents, admiring only himself. And again he says +, A wise man can bear all things, with as equal a temper of mind as Jupiter himself; yea, in this he exceeds, that Jupiter cannot use those things a wife man will not. This was a stupendous effect of pride, to prefer themselves to the Gods they worshipped. None of these philosophers proposed the honour of their Gods, as the chief end of their actions, nor fo much as dreamed of it; all their aim was, to fet up a pillar to their own fame. The known fentence of Cicero justifies this, Vult plane virtus bonorem, nec virtutis ulla alia merces: Virtue aims at honour, neither has it any other reward. And particularly he fays t, We are all moved by the desire of praise, the best of men are led by that which tends to their own glory; the philosophers themselves in those books which they write, of contemning glory, inscribe their own names.—— Virtue desires no other reward of all the labours and dangers it undergoes, but this of praise and glory. If this, O judges, be taken away, what is it, for which in this little course of our life we exercise ourfelves with so many labours? Seneca talks like a profane heathen, when he says ||, Let philosophy minister this to me, that it render me equal with God. And Cicero, Deum te igitur scito esse, know thy self to be a God . Yea, in another place he will not allow that the praise of our being good and virtuous should be ascribed to God. For, says he

^{*} De vita beata, cap. 8. pag. m. 346.

[†] Epist. 73. pag, 164. ‡ Oratio pro Archia, §. 26, 28.

^{||} Epist. 48. pag. 128.

^{} Somnium Scipionis, prope finem.

Chap.1.

45

he*, the Gods neglect little things, take no care of our affes or vines, no body owns they have virtue from God, and they are in the right; for we are justly praised for our virtue, and glory in it, which could not be, if we had that gift from the Gods, and not from ourselves. Thus, and more to this purpose, speaks this famous author, which I need not transcribe. Were all the pagan morality gathered together, it would be full of endless contradictions, one condemning as abominable what another commends and praises. The curious may read enough of this in the works of the ancient fathers against the Gentiles, particularly in Hermias's Irrisio Gentilium Philosophorum, to be found at the end of Justin Martyr's works, in the edition at Cologn 1686. Mr. Locke, in his Essay on Human Understanding, remarks +, We may see it has been customary in some nations to expose their children, to bury them alive without scruple, to fatten them for slaughter, kill them and eat them, dispatch their aged parents, and eat their enemies; yea, they expected paradise as a reward of these abominable practices. Such fatal mistakes prove the insufficiency of nature's light, to afford us a rule of our duty: if they erred fo shamefully in the clearest cases, how shall we expect direction in those that are more intricate?

To conclude this argument, these ancient sages have no authority; were Zeno or Aristippus law-givers to mankind, men might either hearken to their dictates, or reject them, as they suited their interests, passions, principles or humours; they were under no obligation. If consequences are to be drawn from the dictates of nature, how can youth or children do this? Yet there must be a knowledge of the rule before we can act conformable to it. To be sure then, the only method to direct us in our duty, and to prevent declining to the paths of folly and wickedness, is the law of God set before us in his written word, as a light to our feet, and a lamp to our paths.

Fifthly, The light of nature gives no sufficient arguments to enforce obedience; it does not discover the excellency and authority of the law-giver, nor the advantage

^{*} De natura Deorum, lib. 3.8. 85, 86.

⁺ Book 1. Chap. 3. S. 9.

tage we have by his providence, care and inspection, by his wisdom, justice, mercy and goodness, by his redeeming love, and communications of his grace. Neither does it discover the profit and pleasure of holiness in this present life, to excite us to cross our vitious inclinations from the prospect of communion with God, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost: Nor can it afford fuch noble examples of purity, holiness and virtue as those of our blessed Redeemer, of the Apostles, the Patriarchs, Prophets, and cloud of witnesses; the best of the heathens, when compared with these, are but monsters in human shapes, not to be named with them in the fame day. Nor can the light of nature give any full view of the glorious eternal heavenly reward, prepared for the faints, nor of the eternal punishments provided for the disobedient. What the Gentiles talked of the Elysian Fields, and of the punishments in Pluto's kingdom, of Styx, Lethe, Cerberus, Charon, &c. were made so ridiculous by the poets fictions, as the wifest of the heathens believed them not. Cicero was persuaded they were mere sictions of poets and painters *, not worthy of a resutation. Lucian laughs at them †.

Sixtbly, The light of nature gives no clear discoveries of the origin of sin, tho' 'tis clear, as the sun shines, that the world lies in wickedness, that the creation groans under it, the very heathens complain of it. Any body who does not stop his ears, shut his eyes, stisse his conscience, and abandon reason, may see the world full of idolatry, blasphemy, pride, revenge, perjury, rapes, adulteries, thests, robberies, murders, and other abominable evils; all which spring from the universal and contagious corruption that is in man. Nevertheless, the heathen world, who had only the light of nature, knew nothing of the rise of this. I shall first shew, that 'tis necessary to know the origin of evil; next, that the light of nature does not discover it. 'Tis of great importance to know the origin of evil, to understand that man was created with a perfect rectitude of mind in a state of integrity, yet subject to the law which God gave him; which law man broke, and thereby became liable to the miseries God denounced against the breakers thereof. to death, and every evil; yea, lost that rectitude of mind God gave him, and became corrupt and wicked. That to know this, is most necessary, appears, because, first, if this be not known, we can never make any right eftimate of the evil of fin; if men by their original conftitution, without their own fault, be made of fo wicked and infirm a nature, as that either they were inclined to, or unable to refift the temptations, among the throng of which they were placed, 'tis impossible for them to look on fin to be so detestable as really it is, or blame themfelves so much for it, as they ought to do. But since it was otherwise, that man being originally made upright, did fall into misery by his own fault, 'tis certain quite other apprehensions of fin should be maintained, and great care should be used to prevent, or get it removed. 2dly, If the origin of fin is not understood, we can never know what measures to take in subduing our corrupt inclinations, if we know not of what nature they are, and how they come to be so interwoven with our frame, of a piece with ourselves, we shall not know where to begin attempts for reformation; and yet this must be done, else we cannot expect happiness. 3dly, If the origin of evil be not known, we shall be at a loss what thoughts to entertain of God's holiness, justice, goodness and wisdom. If our natures were so wicked in our first constitution, as now we find them, we shall scarce be able to entertain such a high regard for the divine perfections, or to give any tolerable account of the equity of his proceedings, in subjecting the world to such a train of miseries. 4thly, If the origin of fin is not known, we shall be at a loss to understand what estimate God will make of sin; whether he'll look on it as fuch an evil, as to meritany deep punishment, or otherwise. Hence, 5thly, it follows, that the whole state of our affairs with God will be darkned, and be-come unintelligible, if we understand not the source of our corruption. We shall not know, if God will animadvert so heavily on us for our fins as to ruin us, or flightly

* Tuscul. quæst. lib. 1. §. 10, 11.

[‡] Luciani Dialogi Deorum, Necyomantia, and other Treatifes.

Chap. 1. to guide to Happiness.

paſs

pass over them, so as not to call us to an account: if the latter is supposed, our obedience to the law of God is ruined, confidering what man's inclinations and temptations are; who will obey, if no hurt or ruin is to be feared by fin? If the former be supposed, our hope is ruined; we shall not know what value God will put on our obedience, if he'll reject it for finful defects, cleaving thereto, or if he'll pardon us, or upon what terms.

Now, none of the heathens, none of those who had only the light of nature, did understand any thing to purpose of the origin of evil. Plutarch tells us, That those renowned philosophers *, the Pythagoreans, called the principle of good, unity; finite, quiescent, uneven number, square, right, splendid. The principle of evil, they called binary, infinite, moving, crooked, even, long of one fide, unequal, left, obscure. These things are un-intelligible jargon. Not a whit better is the opinion of two anti-gods, related also by Plutarch, who says, many ancient wife men think +, there were two Gods, whose office is quite optofite, the one author of all good things, the other of all evil. Others, with Plato, reckoned vitiofity inherent in matter. The reason of this darkness, as Dr. Stilling fleet observes ‡, was, the they saw, by continual experience, how great a torrent of sin and punishment did overflow the world, yet they were like the Egyptians, who had sufficient evidence of the overflowings of the river Nile, but could not find out the spring or head of it. The reason was, that as corruption increased in the world, so the means of knowledge and instruction decayed; as the Phænomena grew greater, so the reason of them was less understood. The knowledge of the history of the first ages of the world, through which alone they could come to the full understanding of the true cause of evil insensibly decaying in several nations, insomuch as those who were not acquainted with the sacred history of the Jews, had nothing but obscure traditions preserved among them; which, while they sought to restify by their interpretations, they made them more obscure than they

^{*} Plutarch's Treatise of Isis and Osiris, in his Morals, pag. m. 1307. † Plutarch's Treatise of Isis and Osiris, in his Morals. ‡ Origines Sacra, Book 3. §. 8. pag. m. 487.

they found them. True it is, some more modern philo-fophers, as Hierocles, Porphyry, Simplicius, do ascribe the origin of evil not to matter but to the will of man. But these men were * ¿K TÑς ispas sources of the sacred school of Ammonius at Alexandria; here Herennius, Origen and Plotinus were taught, and from them Porphyry, Jamblicus, Hierocles and others: tho'they write fometimes more clearly of the degeneracy of men's fouls from God, and the way of the foul's returning to him, than the ancient philosophers who lived before our Redeemer's incarnation; it is to be considered they were taught by Ammonius at Alexandria, who lived and died a Christian, as Eusebius + and Jerom + assure us; and did communicate to his scholars the sublimer mysteries of divine revelation, together with the speculations of ancient philosophers. But these Platonicks continuing heathens, tho' they grew rich with the spoils taken out of the sacred Scriptures, yet were loth to let it be known whence they had them; as even Plato himfelf did before them, who by means of his abode and acquaintance in Egypt, about the time when the Jews began to flock thither, had more certain knowledge of many truths of great importance concerning the deity, the nature of the foul, and the origin of the world, than many of the Greek philosophers. But here lay his fault, he wrapped up and difguifed his notions in fuch a fabulous manner, that it might be less known whence they were borrowed, and that they might find better entertainment among the Greeks, than they were like to do in their native dress. || Tertullian well observed, Which of the poets or sophists has not drunk knowledge at the sacred fountain of the prophets? Thence the philosophers did quench the thirst of their engine. Indeed they came thither rather to please the itch of their curiofity, than to cure their malady. Upon the whole, reason can never trace the origin of fin to its proper fource, our conscience may condemn us and acquit the deity; but without revelation we can never understand upon what grounds we are condemned, or how the deity is to be justified; nor what is the proper remedy to deliver us from the universal corruption that has infected us, and defiled our whole nature.

^{*} Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ, pag. 506. † Hist. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 19. ‡ De

[†] Hitt. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 19. ‡ De Scriptoribus in Ammonio. || Apolog. cap. 47. pag. m. 52. Quis poetarum, quis sophistarum, qui non omnino de prophetarum fonte potaverit? inde igitur philosophi sitim ingenii sui rigaverunt.

Seventbly, As nature's light cannot discover the origin of our corruption, fo neither can it discern the means of obtaining the pardon of fin. Sin is the greatest evil imaginable, 'tis a transgression of the highest law of the supreme and righteous governour of the world; it contradicts the defign of man's being, makes him notto please God but himself, and debases the being and powers given him for the honour of God, by employing them in contradiction to his declared will. It dethrones God, and fets up the creature in his room; the will of the Creator and creature cross one another, and the latter is preferred. But who can declare the evil of fin, that strikes against infinite goodness, holiness, justice, wisdom, and supreme authority, and ruins man in time and to eternity? Well therefore may it be faid to be infinitely evil. Now, all mankind being guilty of fin, 'tis of the last and highest importance, to know if God will pardon, and upon what terms he will do it; if he refuse to pardon, and certainly punish with such infinite punishment as fin deferves, how miferable shall we be?

But so it is, that reason, not enlightned by divine revelation, can never satisfy any man in this case. Can the light of nature without revelation, give any rational satisfaction to these or the like questions? If, considering the greatness of sin, the justice, wisdom, and holiness of God, and the honour of his government, 'tis consistent to pardon any sin? If it be, whether he will pardon all, many or sew sins? What sins, or what degrees of sin will God forgive? If he'll pardon without a reparation to the honour of his laws, and without suitable satisfaction to his infinitely offended justice? If he require reparation and satisfaction, what it is, and by whom it is to be performed? How obtain we a right to this satisfaction? If he pardon, will he remit all punishment due to fin, or how much? How shall we know that our fins in particular are pardoned? Will he merely pardon, or will he over and above re-admit to grace, and to as intire favour, as before man finned? Will he not only pardon, but also reward the finner's imperfect obedience? The revelation of the word of God in the Gospel, will furnish us with a rational answer to all these queries; but the mere light of nature can never refolve them. are not only above the reach of natural reason, but it belongs not to man to decide them. The offence is committed against God; he alone understands what the contempt of his authority, the disorder brought into his government by fin, and the disobedience of his creature amounts to. He alone is judge what is proper to be done in this case; at his tribunal 'tis to be tried; man is too ignorant, too guilty, and too partial in his own favour, to be allowed judge. The light of nature does no where afford us the decision of God in this matter. In the works of Creation 'tisnot to be found. The works of Providence give examples of patience in forbearing some sinners, and of justice in punishing others with temporary strokes; but determine nothing as to divine remission. The consciences of men read them fometimes sad lectures of divine justice, but if they be not informed by the word of God, they can give no discoveries of forgiveness. The profane and inhuman facrifices of the heathens, of which we shall give account in the following chapter, prove they knew nothing of it. Tho' the divine mercy be infinite, yet it is regulated by his wifdom and pleafure, and what is for his own honour: a reparation must be had to the honour of the divine laws, and a fatisfaction to offended justice; and what that is, or how 'tis to be had, the light of nature does no where discover. 'Tis the word of God only that explains the satisfaction of Christ the son of God, our Redeemer, in our room.

Eighthly, Tho' the inclination of men run universally early, and with great force upon fin, leading us to be proud, revengeful, ambitious, passionate, lustful, yet the light of nature does not give any fufficient means to root out these inclinations to sin, or subdue its power.

While \mathbf{E}_{2}

While corruption remains unfubdued, 'tis impossible for man to reach happiness, or to be sure of acceptance with God. Nature is corrupt, man out of order; reason is kept under, the brutal part bears fway: there's continual occasion for remorfe, checks, challenges of conscience, and fears of the resentment of a holy God. There can be no firm confidence of access to God, or near fellowship with him, while we entertain his enemies in our bosom, yea have them interwoven with our natures. The heathens gave no fufficient rules to reform our nature, or fubdue our corruptions. We have heard in the fame chapter how defective and lame, yea how hurtful and pernicious their morality was, and we may hear more of it in the fequel of this effay. The deifts give as few folid rules to this purpose: yea the Lord Herbert their patron and founder says *, As you would not accuse a man sick of a lethargy, of laziness; or one that's hydropick, of immoderate thirst: so we must not censure a man prompted by passion, or by lust, of the evil he commits; the blame may be more commodiously laid on the redundancy of peccant humours, than on an ill habit. This divinity will please profune men to a degree, and afford a handsome excuse for the worst of vices. But the Christian Religion informs us of the faving work of regeneration, and the fanctifying work of the Spirit of Grace, of the great duties of piety towards God, righteousness towards men, and fobriety towards ourselves, of the mortification of fin, and holiness of life; of the best means to affift us in this work; of the influences of the Spirit of Grace, of the noblest examples to excite us, and the greatest rewards to encourage us to promote holiness in the fear of the Lord. Upon the first appearance of Christianity in the world, innumerable multitudes of men became moral, pious and holy, which the dictates of philosophy could never do. What did the best rules of pagan morality, but dam up corruption upon one fide, and let it run out in another with greater force, to make that run in a fecret channel that run open before? How corrupt and defective the best heathen philosophy is, we may fee in Theophilus Gale's Court of the Gentiles, Part III. and many other authors. The best of it was but vain deceit, intruding into those things they had not seen, vainly puff'd up with a fleshly mind; it could neither subdue vice, nor promote true piety. Nintbly, That natural Religion cannot conduct us to everlafting happiness, does appear from the experience of all men. Let us view man as made for this noble end, to glorify God and enjoy him, and left to pursue this in the use of his rational faculties, under the conduct of the mere light of nature, we shall find the experience of the world confirms the infufficiency of this light to reach this end. As to the generality of mankind, we may find them pursuing other things than their great end, walking in contradiction to the law defigned to conduct them to happiness. Look to philosophers, we may see them ri-sing early and sitting late on their notions, yet none of them understanding true happiness. Instead of giving plain rules to mankind, they obtrude obscure, dark, unprofitable sentences. How can nature's light remove darkness, guilt, and corruption? Without divine revelation men walk in darkness and have no light. And as to guilt, tho' they try all ways that fear, terrors, a racked imagination, yea that Satan could suggest, offering fometimes the fruit of their body for the fin of their foul, yet they never took the right way to deliver themselves from it, nor to subdue lust and stem the tide of corruption; tho' God did forbear to punish them, yet their bearts were fully set in them to do evil. As for the deists, who trust to the sufficiency of nature's light, and mock at Divine Revelation, neither their principles nor practices declare they are in the right road to obtain happiness. As for men who live under the Gospel, and are strangers to the power of godliness, tho' they have great advantages of means beyond others, yet their practice declares, that without the efficacy of divine grace, they can never enter into the strait and narrow road that leads unto life. And finally, as to true believers, they both in their publick and private devotions acknowledge their guilt, dark-E 3 ness 54 Religions invented by Men, absurd.

^{*} Lord Herbert de veritate, apud Halyburton's Natural Religion infusficient, pag. 206.

ness and inability, and send up earnest prayers, cries and tears for rich supplies of grace, without which they can do nothing.

In the last place, That the light of nature is insufficient in itself to conduct men to happiness, is evident, because all the religions that have been invented by men are abfurd, and contrary to reason. The religion of the sews taught in the Old Testament, before the incarnation of our Saviour, and the Christian Religion taught in the New Testament since his coming, are not the inventions of men, but sounded upon Divine Revelation. The principal ways of religious worship, devised by men, are the Heathenish and the Mahometan. How absurd and unreasonable heathenism was, beside what has been already advanced, I shall discover more fully in a chapter by it self: only here in as sew words as I can, I shall shew how absurd the religion of Mahomet is, and how just grounds we have to reject it.

First, From the life of Mahomet, the founder and contriver thereof. He was born of mean parents, educated to merchandize by his uncle Abu Taleb. Being employed afterward as factor to a rich widow, he infinuated fo into her favour, as she gave herself to him in marriage. Being thus render'd master of her person and estate, he was equal in riches to the best of the city, and his ambitious mind began to entertain thoughts of possessing the sovereignty. Having weigh'd all means to bring this to pass, he found none to probable, as framing that imposture, which he afterward vented with fo much mischief to the world. The circumstances of the time and place did much favour the spreading of this delusion; for the Arabians were ignorant, superstitious Gentiles, worshipping Idols, Alat, Az, and Menat, as the Alcoran speaks *, and tainted with many other superstitions. The Christians, who were not many in that country, were mightily rent into parties, by the heresies of Nestorius and Eutyches. An inundation of superstition and ignorance had crept in among them, and the purity of religion was under great decay.

decay. About the fame time the bishop of Rome, by virtue of a grant from the tyrant Phocas, did usurp the title of Univerfal Paftor, or Head of the Christian Church. Thus Antichrist did set his foot in the western and eastern parts of the christian world at the same time. Mahomet or Mohamed did about the 38th year of his age withdraw from his former trade, and retired to the cave *Hi*ra; where, as he pretended, he conversed with the Angel Gabriel, and in the 40th year of his age he assumed the title of the Apostle of God, and under that character begun to propagate his imposture, but privately, having very few proselytes. Some designed to have put a stop to his project, but Abu Taleb his uncle deseated their defigns. Being fafe under his protection, he boldly published some chapters of the Alcoran. The main arguments he made use of to delude the people, were promises and threats. His promises were chiefly of an earthly paradife, framed to the gust of the Arabians, who lived under the Torrid Zone; and therefore the use of women, rivers of waters, cooling drinks, shady gardens, and pleasant fruits, are most delightful to them. To answer these desires, he calculated his paradise, as may be seen in the Alcoran: They shall enter into gardens*, where the trees are covered with branches and leaves, there they will repose on fine beds lined with crimson. They shall have wives, who shall not cast a look but upon them, and whom no person, man nor angel, may touch before them: they shall resemble coral and rubies. What Lord do ye blass beme but your own Lord? There be in those gardens women that have eyes exceeding black, and bodies exceeding white, covered with pavilions. He also described the punishments of hell, such as might be exceedingly afflicting to the Arabians †: They shall drink nothing but boiling stinking water, breathe nothing but hot winds, dwell for ever in continual burning, fire and smoke, eat nothing but briars and thorns, and the fruit of a tree, Zaron, that rijeth out of the bottom of kell, and its branches resemble the heads of devils; and this fruit shall be in their belly like burning sitch. That he might leave nothing that could beget fear, he sets forth to E 4 the m ^{*} Alcoran, Chap. 2,55, 76.

⁺ Ibid. Chap. 7, 37, 43.

them what miferies had fallen upon those that would not be instructed by the prophets; that for this reason the old world was destroyed by the deluge, Sodom by fire, and Ad and Thamud, two ancient tribes of the Arabs, were extirpated for the fame reason. What exceedingly vexed him was, his oppofers defired to fee a miracle, fuch as Jesus and Moses wrought, to prove their mission from God *. In answer to this, he sometimes told them, That Mohamed was a prophet sent to preach to them the rewards of paradife, and the pains of hell; that their predecessors contemned the miracles of other prophets, therefore he would work none. And sometimes he faid, That those who were ordained to believe, should do so without miracles. But when he came to Medina, and got an army to back his cause, he told them plainly, God sent Moses and Jesus with miracles, yet men cheyed them not, and therefore he had fent him without miracles, now to force them, by the power of the fword, to do his will \(\dagger). Hence he forbad his disciples to enter into any difputes about religion, but to fight for it. When you meet with unbelievers, fays he, in the chapter of battles, cut off their heads, kill them, make them prisoners, and never cease to persecute them, till they have laid down their arms and submitted to you. To encourage them powerfully to follow this maxim, he promifes all those who die in fuch holy wars, that they shall go strait to paradife, notwithstanding all the crimes they committed during their whole life. Never was a captain better obeyed; for his zealous followers made use of fire and sword to propagate Mahometism; and there was no way for a conquered people to escape their fury, but by embacing their religion.

In the 10th year of his pretended mission, his uncle and protector Abu Taleb and his wife Chadya dying, his party became weak at Mecca. To strengthen them, he took three other wives, Ayesha the daughter of Abubeker, Zueda the daughter of Zama, and Hapsha the daughter of Omar, and thus became fon-in-law to the three principalmen in the city. In the 12th year of his pretended mission is placed the Mestra, that is, the samous nightjourney journey from Mecca to Jerusalem. He pretended, as he lay in bed with his wife Ayesha, he heard a knocking at the door. When he rose, he found the angel Gabriel with feventy pair of wings, and the beast Alborak by him; but the beast having been long idle, from the time of Christ to Mahomet, would not let Mahomet mount, till he promised him a place in paradise. Then getting on with ease, he came, the angel Gabriel leading the bridle, in the twinkling of an eye, from Mecca to Jerusalem, where all the faints waited on him at the gate of the temple. Mahomet and Gabriel leaving thefe faints, he afcended in a ladder of light. Upon their arrival at the first heaven, which is of pure filver, having stars hanging in chains of gold, each of the bulk of mount Nobo, near Mecca, the angels watched to keep the devils off them. Here he met with an old man, our first father Adam, who gave thanks to God for fo great a fon. Here he faw angels, some in shape of birds, and others of beasts, and among them a cock as white as fnow; his head reached to the second heaven, the distance of 500 days journey, his wings extending from east to west; that every morning, God singing a hymn, the cock joins with him so load, as all in heaven and earth, except men and fairies, crow alfo. But at the day of judgment he draws in his wings, and crows no more. Then he goes to the fecond heaven, all of gold, and faw Noab with more angels than in the first. In the third heaven, which was made of precious stones, at the entrance, he met Abraham, who recommended himself to his prayers; and there he saw a vast many more angels than in the former heaven, and among them a great one of fo prodigious a fize, that the distance between his two eyes was as much as 70000 days journey, according to our rate of travelling here on earth. Thence he ascended to the fourth heaven, which was all of emerald, where he met Joseph the fon of Jacob, who recommended himself to his prayers. Here he saw a vaftly larger number of angels, and another great angel as high as from the fourth to the fifth heaven, who was continually weeping for the fins of men. Thence he goes to the fifth heaven, made of adamant, where he found Moles,

^{*} Alcoran, Chap. 6. 17.

Moses, and a greater number of angels than in the former. Thence he ascended into the sixth heaven, made of carbuncle, where he found John the Baptist. Hence to the feventh heaven, all made of divine light: here he found Jesus Christ; where he alters his style, for he saith not, that Jesus Christ recommended himself to his prayers, but that he recommended himself to Jesus Christ, defiring him to pray for him; whereby he acknowledgeth him certainly to be greater. But it was his custom. through the whole scene of his imposture, thus to flatter the Christians. Here, he faith, he found a much greater number of angels than in all the other heavens besides, and among them one extraordinary angel, having seventy thousand heads, and in every head seventy thousand tongues, and every tongue uttering seventy thousand distinct voices. The angel Gabriel not being permitted to go any further, Mobamed was directed to the throne of God, where he faw a vast extension of light, of that brightness, that his eyes could not bear it. On the right fide of the throne, the impostor says, God's name and his own were written, with these Arabick words, La Ellah, Ellallah, 990= hamed reful Dlah, that is, there is no God but God, and Mahomet is his prophet; which is the Creed of the Mabometans. Being approached to the presence of God, as near as within two bow-shots, he tells us, He saw him fitting on his throne, with a covering of seventy thousand veils before his face; that God laid his hand on him, and there discovered to him his whole law. Then Gabriel condutted him back, and set him again upon the Alborak, which he left tied at Jerusalem, and then taking the bridle in his hand, conducted him back to Mecca, in the same manner, as he brought him thence; and all this within the space of the tenth part of one night. This abominable lying fable is shortly hinted at in the Alcoran, and more at large, gathered out of Mahometan authors, by the learned Dr. *Prideaux, Hornbeck+, and others. When Mohamed reported this ridiculous story, many of his own fect received it with a hoot, laughed and stumbled at it; but

Life of Mahamet, Edit. 6th, Pag. 46 to 60.
 Summa Controvers. Pag. 80, 81. & apud authores ibi citatos.

but they who had fwallowed the rest, digested this also: which, with others of the same kind, taken from the memories of those who conversed with Mahomet, make up the volumes of their oral law or Sonah.

Mahomet finding difficulties in staying longer at Mecca, he engaged some disciples at Yathreb, now called Medina, 270 miles from Mecca; and on the 12th of the month Rebbia, that is with us the 24th of September, he flies to Yathreb. From this flight the Mahometans reckon their Hegira, which in Arabick fignifies flight, and coincides in its commencement with the year of our Lord 622. Being fettled here, he changed the name of the place, calling it Medinatol-nabi, the city of the prophet, or fimply Medina, as it is called to this day. Having thus obtained his desire, to have a town at his command, and having preached his imposture 13 years, for the remaining 10 years of his life he fights for it; and that he may be no more troubled with any questions about his religion, he forbids all disputes about it *. But 'tis not my business to enter into the detail of his wars; those who defire to be informed, may fee Elmacine's Historia Saracenica, Ockley's History of the Saracens, Prideaux's Life of Mahomet and others. In the 10th year of the Hegira, he was poisoned at Chaiba, in a shoulder of mutton, and died in the 63d year of his age, and 23d of his pretended mission.

But to shew further what just grounds we have to reject Mahometism as an imposture, I shall consider, 1st, How scandalous and enormous Mahomet's life was. 2dly, Offer some grounds for rejecting his Alcoran. As to the life of Mahomet, in the sirst part of it, he led a very licentious course in rapine and plunder, attended with bloods shed, according to the use of the Arabs, where one tribe took from another all they could. After he commenced a prophet, he swelled with ambition, aiming to gain an empire, and teaching his disciples not to dispute for religion, but propagate it by force of arms and dint of the sword, as appears by what is above advanced. Secondly, He was a most lustful leacher, guilty of polygamy, adultery, and the like crimes. After Cadigba died, which was in the 50th year of his life, he took at least sifteen wives; others reckon them 21, of which five died before him, fix he repudiated, and 10 were alive at his death*. Zaina, one of his wives, was the spouse of Zeyd, an enfranchised slave; she being beautiful, he caused Zeyd to put her away, that he himself might marry her: at which some of his disciples taking offence, out comes the 33d chapter of the Alcoran, where God is brought in, telling he had married Zeyd's wife to Mahomet, and rebuking him, that knowing God had given him this liberty, he should abstain so long from her, out of regard to the people. Where at once we have him guilty of adultery, blasphemy and imposture; adultery, in marrying and possessing Zeyd's wife; blasphemy, by fathering such a wickedness upon God; and imposture, in deluding the people with such a pretended revelation. Besides all these with such a pretended revelation. Besides all these wives, he had a concubine dearly beloved, an Egyptian sent by the governour of that country, to gratify his brutish passion, that he might more easily treat with him about some affairs. His lust straight kindled to her, so as Ayesha and Haphsha, two of his wives, found him in the fact. They making a noise, the cunning impostor, to smooth the matter, emits the 66th chapter of the Alcoran, called a probibition; where the first words are, O prophet forbid not, for the contentment of thy wives, that which God has permitted to thee; God hath granted unto you to lie with your maid-fervants. And in that same chapter he threatens his wives with divorce, unless they were content; whereupon they submitted, and returned to his house. These laws gave such liberty to his licentious followers, as they made no more words about this matter, but laid hold of the opportunity; and ever fince it has been an established law among all that sect, besides their wives, to keep as many women-flaves, as they shall think fit to buy. Tho' this impostor had so many wives, and was so excessive in lust, yet he left no child behind him but Fatima, the wife of Ali, who furvived him only 60 days. There are strange things said of his lust, as that he had in venery the strength of forty other men, and other stories of that kind to be found in Dr. Prideaux †, and other authors cited by him. Whatever laws he gave to restrain lust in others, he reserved still latitude to himfelf. He allowed no man to have above four wives; but to himself he referved a liberty to marry as many as he pleased*. He obliged others who had two, three, or four wives, to use them all alike; but as for himself, he might do as he thought fit. He prohibited others to marry near relations, as mothers, fifters of their father or mother, their aunts or uncles daughters; but in that 33d chapter of the Alcoran, which feems calculated to gratify his brutish passion, he brings in God exempting him from that law, and giving him privilege to take to wife the daughters of his uncles or aunts, or whomsoever he pleafed. Nothing but the whole fex would content him. Finally, that Mahomet is a vile impostor, is further evident, because, tho' he pretended that he himself was a prophet, and had the impudence to fay, Remember how Jesus the son of Mary said to the children of Israel, I am the messenger of God, he has sent me to consirm the Old Testament, and to declare to you there shall come a prophet after me, whose name shall be Mahomet +; yet there is not one fyllable of him either in the Old or New Testament; yea some of his own people called him a magician.

^{*} Alcoran, Chap. 4, translated by Du Ryer,

^{*} Prideaux's Life of Mahemet, Pag. 118. † Life o: Mahemet, Pag. 127, & leaq.

Secondly, The Alcoran, the Makometan bible, the prop and standard of their religion, is nothing but a rhapsody of lyes, contradictions and sables. True it is, the impostor, to shew his impudence, extols it to the heavens, saying ‡, 'Tis sent for the instruction of men, copied out of a book that's kept in heaven, to which honour and praise is due eternally; that 'tis || sent of God, inspired of God, and confirms the ancient scriptures. But notwithstanding these commendations, it contains many abfurd salshoods, as Pharaoh's wife prayed, Lord build me a house in Paradise, the books of Moses and Abraham ††. Now the latter wrote no books. That Christ spoke in the cradle as a man of forty or sifty years ‡‡. That Abraham's father's name was Azer. That Ishmael was one of the prophets. That Zachary was dumb only three nights*, whereas he was so nine months. That they killed not the Messiah, but one who resembled him +. He belyes the patriarchs, faying, Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob believed his Alcoran, tho' they lived some thoufands of years before he was born. He speaks falshood of the Apostles, making them his scholars, tho' they lived about fix hundred years before him. This specimen shews that that book does not proceed from the God of truth, but from Satan, a lyar from the beginning, and Mahomet his scholar. 2dly, It contains many foolish, romantick, idle, fabulous stories; as where he tells that Solomon had an army composed of men, devils and birds; and a pismire cried out, O pismires, hasten to your houses, lest Solomon's army tread you under foot ‡. That Solomon called for the whoop that was absent, she came and brought him tydings from the queen of Sheba; to try the truth of this, he fent the whoop back with a letter to the queen of Sheba; and more of this stuff. That Abraham and Ishmael razed the foundations of the temple of Mecca; that they were fent to keep clear the oratory there; that a mountain was raised over the Israelites to overshadow them ||; that the moon was divided into two parts ; that Moses was called in the valley of Toi ++; that when Cain killed his brother Abel, God fent a raven that made a pit in the earth, and shewed him the manner how to bury his brother ##; that he made the winds subject to Solomon, to blow at his command when it pleased him; he made the devils subject to him, some built his palaces, others dived into the feas to bring him pearls, others were bound to attend his commands ||||. Many other fables he tells; as that Alexander the Great came to the place of the fun-rifing, and found him lying in a clay fountain; that at the day of judgment the mountains shall be carded like wool, and the heaven and the earth being loofed, eight angels shall sustain God's throne. More fables of the same kind may be seen in Mahomet's conference with Abdias, translated into latin by Hermannus Dalmata, the abstract whereof may be found in our learned countryman, Dr. Forbes his Instructiones bistorico-theologica*. And yet more of these fables are to be seen in the book de generatione & nutri-tura Mohamed, Of the generation and education of Mahomet; where, by a strange heap of fabulous stories, the Mahometans run up the genealogy of their false prophet, through a race of prophets, to Adam; upon each of which prophets, fay they, shined a beam of light +. But above all, an innumerable heap of fables may be found in their Sonab, or oral law. Clenard, who went to the College of Fez, and studied the Arabick tongue fo carefully, as he read many of their books, and could even fpeak that language, fays, in his epiftle to Mr. Latomus, præter Alcoranum, babent libros Sunæ, tam ridiculos, ut ipsi sese possint confutare; i. e. Beside the Alcoran they have their books of Sonah, so ridiculous, that they may confute themselves. 3dly, The Alcoran, besides its lyes and fables, is also stuffed with contradictions; as, that all who live right, whether Jews or Christians, shall be beloved of God; and in another place, none can be faved but they who embrace the Alcoran t. Sometimes he favs, That all Devils shall be saved, and elsewhere, that only the Devils shall be saved, who obey his Alcoran ||. What shameful reserves he makes from the laws he gives to others, that he may have liberty for his own lust, we have already feen. No wonder the Alcoran is such an hotch-potch, fince it proceeded from such a spirit of contradiction and wickedness, and was compiled of some confused papers, left by Mohamed in some rusty chests, mutilated and spoiled, eaten with mice and vermine. Indeed the reading of it may be enough to make any perfon of confideration to reject it from being a standard of truth, and rather loath it as a confused jargon. But we have enough to the present purpose concerning Mahometi/m, the defign of this digression being to show that the religions religions invented by men are abfurd, and contrary to reason.

^{*} Lib. 4. cap. 13. pag. m. 199. & feqq. + Vide Hottingeri Hist, Orient, lib. 1. cap. 3.

[#] Alcoran, cap. 12. Il Ibidem.

Having thus demonstrated the infusficiency of natural religion to conduct mankind by itself to eternal happiness, it will naturally follow, that there was a necessity for a particular Divine Revelation to make the whole doctrine of religion clear and obvious to all capacities, to add weight and authority to the plainest precepts, to animate our fears with the terror of punishments, to strengthen our hopes with the encouragements of a glorious reward, and to furnish men with extraordinary affistances, to enable them to overcome the corruptions of their nature. The fervice due to God, the incarnation of the fon of God, his fatisfaction in our room to redeem us from mifery, the refurrection, and the nature of the general judgment, with many other articles of Religion, are above what unenlighten'd reason can discover, and need to be cleared up by divine revelation; that is, by a formal declaration coming from God, that we may know certainly by an infallible testimony what is his divine will. God is the infinitely perfect intelligent Being, who has created man, reason allows us not to doubt but he can by infallible means teach us what is necessary for us to know. Revelation is also necessary to give an unmoveable foundation to Religion, fince the greater part thereof is so many declarations of what God does, and will do for men. Who but himself can concerning these things declare his mind? His revelation finally and infallibly determines the truth, and affures us of what he will do. Reason at best can but darkly teach us a possibility or resemblance of these things; 'tis Revelation effectually fixes our faith concerning them. It was therefore most reasonable, and agreeable to the notions we have of the perfectly good God, to wish and hope for such a revelation: and this was what some of the best and wisest of the philosophers did. When therefore there are some books proposed to us, which pretend to be sent by God on this glorious errand, to enlighten our minds, to affift our reason, supply all our wants, and in a word, to teach us how we may worship, glorify and enjoy God; it concerns us all to consider seriously what they advance, and whether or no they carry along with them sufficient marks of being a divine revelation. And this we shall now endeavour to do.

I have already exposed the vain pretences of the Mahometan religion, and shall in the course of this book shew the vanity and folly of Paganism. We have yet the fewish and Christian religion to consider; and that both these were revealed by God, shall now be proved.

That the Jewish religion contained in the Old Testament is so, may appear, First, from the excellency of the doctrine. There we have right notions of God; he is represented as infinitely great and good, and therefore to be loved and feared with the highest degree of affection and veneration. There we have right apprehensions of the nature of man, both as to his original excellency, and as to his vileness and weakness contracted by his sin and apostacy from God. The truths there revealed are suitable to the honour of God, to relieve the most pressing necessities of men, to clear up the doubts of reason, to quiet the commotions of conscience, and to point out fuch an intercourse with God, from whom we are fallen, as tends to promote our recovery. The doctrine and worfhip revealed in the fcriptures lead to a redeemer, thro whom alone complete falvation may be obtained. It discovers a satisfaction given to the justice of God for the breach of his law, and that those, who by nature are children of wrath, may have their fins pardoned, and become a peculiar people; and so have the righteousness of the law fulfilled in them, and by the operation of the fpirit made willing to walk in God's statutes. Thus the justice, mercy, and wisdom of God are equally glorified, and our Salvation fecured and advanced.

Secondly, That our Religion founded upon the Old Testament, (the same may be said of the New) is revealed of God, appears by the manifestation of divine power in working of Miracles. By Miracles we are to understand some wonderful work, that either exceeds all created power, or all the power and art of man, and is convolute.

66 That the Scriptures are revealed by GOD,

trary to the nature of devils, which does not fall out by accident, but must be foretold, so as the person who works the miracle, does it to confirm his doctrine, or they his commission from God. And these miracles must not be done in a corner, but in the view of the world, and in fight of those to be convinced by them. Miracles wrought after this manner to confirm a doctrine, tending to promote the honour of God, and good of man, must either be wrought by God, or some good angel at his command; being contrary to the nature of evil fpirits, which hate God, and feek to ruin man; and therefore can never engage men to believe and obey a doctrine wich leads to eternal happiness, or do any wonderful work to encourage them in it. Since then these Miracles must come from God, so must the doctrine they confirm be from him: because God cannot put forth his divine power to confirm a lye; nor can he command or fuffer good angels to do wonderful works for fuch an end; nor would they of themselves do it, being contrary to their nature, and duty to God. Therefore, if Moses and the Prophets, Christ and his Apostles did truly teach that doctrine, and work fuch Miracles to confirm it, as are related in the books of the Old and New Testament, then these books must of necessity be the Word of God, and the history related in them must be true. What a multitude of miracles were done by Moses? As, the ten plagues on Egypt*; the drying up of the red sea, till the Israelites passed over +; the drowning of the Egyptians; the feeding Ifrael with Manna, that fell like a dew about their camp for 40 years, and never ceased to fall, till they did eat the first-fruits of the promised land ||. The rock being fmitten, waters gushed out in abundance, to supply the wants of the people and their flocks ‡. When the law was given, what a terrible appearance was there at mount Sinai, of the mount burning with fire, with blackness, darkness, and tempest? If a beast did but touch the mountain, it was floned or fhot through with a dart . The pillar of cloud overshadowed the taber-

^{*} Exod. vii—xiii. † Exod. xiv. | Exod. xvi— ‡ Exod. xvii, Numb. xx. 7, 8.  Exod. xix, Hebr. xii. 18—20;

Chap. 1. proved by the Doctrine and Miracles. 67 nacle in the day-time, and in the night it appeared as fire*. The earth did open and fwallow up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, with their families †. A brazen ferpent being lifted up on a pole, healed those who looked on it. of the mortal bites the fiery serpents gave them #.

on it, of the mortal bites the fiery serpents gave them ||. During the forty years the Israelites were in the wilderness, their clothes and their shoes did not wax old‡. How many Miracles were done by the prophets Elijab and Elisha, and above all by our Lord Jesus? The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up . All which Miracles were recorded in the age and place, when and where they were wrought. They were not done in a corner, but in the face of the world, before many witnesses, and those, persons of known credit and integrity. Upon the whole, these Miracles prove Moses and the

Upon the whole, these Miracles prove Moses and the Prophets, and especially our Lord Jesus, at whose command they were done, to have been sent of God; that their doctrine is true, being confirmed by this divine testimony; that the books: where these things are related, is the Word of God, and the history true.

Thirdly, That our religion, founded upon the Old and New Testament, is revealed by God, appears by Prophecies, and extraordinary manifestations of supernatural knowledge; by revealing secrets, which can only be done, either immediately by God himself, or mediately by good angels. These secrets are either of things past, present, or to come. Of the first kindare the discovery of those works of creation, done before man was made ††; and Daniel's revealing Nebuchadnezzar's dream ||||. Examples of the second are, Abijah's discovering of Jerobeam's wise , and Elisha's discovering to the king of Israel, the secret counsels of the king of Assyria†‡†, and Christ's disclosing the secret thoughts of the Scribes and Pharises ||||||. Of the third, many examples are contained in scripture, as foretelling

^{*} Exod. xiii. 21. + Numb. xvi. || Numb. xxi. 9. ‡ Deut. xxix. 5.  Matth. xi. 5. ++ Genetisi. || Daniel ii. 19—28.  1 Kings xiv. 5, 6, +++ 2 Kings vi. 9—13. || Matth ix. 3, 4,

68 That the Scriptures are revealed by GOD,

the Babylonish captivity, and return from it; that the Messiah was to come of the house of David; and many of the same kind. The revealing of things to come, is called prophelying in the strictest sense, the largely taken, it also comprehends the other two.

Now, let us confider how far the discovery of these things does prove a divine revelation and mission. Here we must remark, first, that the revelation of things past, is not a fufficient proof of it; because the truth thereof entirely depends upon the word of the revealer, whose veracity is yet in question. Wherefore the history of the creation given by Moses, is not a proof of his divine mission, the truth of the discovery being proved by the unquestionable evidence he gave of his being fent of God, to reveal that and other fecrets. Yet if the truth of a past fecret, after he has discovered it, can be known otherwise than by the word of the revealer; as when Nebuchadnezzar exactly remembred, that the revelation Daniel made of his dream was the very thing he dreamed, and thence justly owns, God is a God of Gods, a Lord of Kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou could reveal this secret *; in that case 'tis a just proof of a divine mission. As to revealing things present that are secret, these only prove a divine mission, when there is a discovery of the secret thoughts and counfels of the heart, which cannot come but by revelation; and therefore fixes a conviction and impression thereof upon those who are present, as in the examples above alledged. Thirdly, The foretelling things to come, is not of itself known to be a divine revelation, until it be known, that the thing foretold has accordingly come to pass. The predictions of prophets, which were not to be fulfilled till after their death, did not prove their divine mission to those, to whom at first they prophefied. They were obliged to give other evidences by working miracles, as the prophets who spoke against the altar at Bethel +, or by declaring prophecies foon to be accomplifned, as Jeremiab | . Nevertheless, the longer space of time that may interveen betwixt the first intimation of these Prophecies and their accomplishment, is so much a clearer proof of a divine mission and message to those who have got certain knowledge, that they were really uttered at the time alledged, and of their being accomplished as foretold. Wherefore the Prophecies of the Old and New Testaments, which have been accomplished in later ages, are an evident proof to us, and may be to Christians to the end of the world, of the divine original of these books, which did foretel these things many ages before they came to pass.

^{*} Dan. ii. 47. † 1 Kings xiii, 1—5. || Jer. xxyiii, 16, 17. Chap. xxi. 5, 6.

Next, We shall give some general characters, whereby true prophecies may be difcerned from false or counterfeit. These are of the same nature, by which true miracles are diffinguished from false. 1st, That they reveal fecrets, which exceed all natural or acquired knowledge, all the cunning and conjecture of men. That they discover secrets, which either exceed all knowledge of evil spirits, or are contrary to their nature to discover; because the knowledge of them is necessary to promote the honour of God, and good of mankind. 3dly, It must be known to those who own the commission of the prophet, that at least some of the prophecies have come to pass, or that he has proved by miracles, that he was fent to publish them. The authority of the prophet being once thus established, if the prophecies, not yet fulfilled, be agreeable to the doctrine and other predictions known to have come from God; these, tho' not yet accomplished, the time thereof not being fully come, are to be received by the Church, and believed as divine truths and prophecies, which are to be accomplished in their feafoa.

If we apply these rules to the books of the Old and New Testament, we shall find the writers of them have been divinely inspired with supernatural knowledge, and that these books contain the oracles of God, whereof I shall mention only a few instances. First, The prophecies of Moses recorded, Levit. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii. containing predictions of the great happiness the people of Israel were to enjoy, if they obeyed God; and of the great judgments he was to instict, in case of disobedience:

F 3 which

70 That the Scriptures are revealed by GOD,

which being compared with the history from the time of Moses to that of the captivity, were exactly accomplished. To which we may add the particular consideration of that part of the prophecy, where God promifes to that people, he would not cast them off nor destroy them utterly, but will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors *; which was fulfilled, not only in God's preserving that people, during the Babylonish captivity, but has also been verified after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and through all ages to this day. For we find the Jews, tho' scattered through all nations of the world, have always, and even at this time do keep themfelves diffinct from others, retaining their ancient names, following the particular laws and customs of their own nation, founded on the tradition of their fore-fathers, having the books of Moses and the prophets, the letters and words whereof they are wifely careful to preferve, even when they understand very little of the sense of them. Whereas those famous nations of Affyrians, Syrians, Egyptians, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Chaldeans, Philistines, and the rest who made once so great a figure in the world in the days of the prophets, are now utterly destroyed, neither name nor remembrance of them being left on the earth, fince there is neither nation nor family in the world that bear their name, or can give any reasonable proof they are descended of their posterity. Now this is what God alone could foresee or foretel, and what the fovereign governour of the world could only in his wifdom bring to pass: and yet both we in this generation, and all betwixt us and the time of the prophets, have feen and do fee accomplished before our eyes. The books therefore that contain these prophecies must be of divine original, and we in this generation have a convincing proof that it is fo, by the fulfilling of these ancient prophecies in our view.

A Second instance is afforded by the prophecies of Daniel +, concerning Nebuchadnezzar's image, representing the four monarchies, the vision of the four beatls further explaining the same; the ram, in the 8th chapter, signifying the Persian monarchy, and the he-goat the Grecian: which being compared with the history of the times writ by heathens, who knew nothing of these prophecies, as Diodorus Siculus, Justin, Plutarch, Curtius, Arrian, Livy, &c. the fulfilling of them will exactly appear.

€x-

A Third example we find in the promises, concerning the Messias, who is described and prophesied of by Moses * and all the prophets. Isaiah describes him as God-man +, born of a virgin ‡. David, as the eternal fon of God ||. In other Texts his death and its circumstances are particularly foretold , his doctrine ++, his miracles ##, his refurrection ||||, his afcention . The time of his coming is particularly characterised, Before the scepter and law-giver depart from Judah +++; that is, after they were subjected to a foreign power, and before the civil government was intirely diffolved, or the nation broken and dispersed; which must have fallen out betwixt the time of their being conquered by the Romans, under Pompey the Great, and the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. Our Redeemer is also prophefied to come, during the standing of the second temple +++, and before the end of Daniel's feventy weeks || || ||, which were to be accomplished before the destruction of the temple and city, which was to be foon after the cutting off of the Messiah; for then the land was to be made defolate, Jerusalem destroyed, and the people carried captive, without any time fet for their restauration. Now all these prophecies, and many others to the same purpose, scattered up and down the books of the Old Testament, published by men living in far distant ages, make up a full description of the person of the Messah, and a kind of history of him; all which we find exactly accomplished in Jesus the Son of Mary, whose history is contained in the New Testament. The matters of fact there recorded being certainly true, and we shall after-F 4 ward

72 That the Scriptures are revealed by GOD,

ward prove that it was impossible they could be forged; it follows, from the accomplishment of prophecies, that the books of the Old and New Testament must be the Word of God; and that particularly Jesus, our Redeemer, described in the New Testament, is undoubtedly the Messiah, who has come into the world, according to the predictions of Moses and other prophets, since God alone could foretel, and bring these things to pass.

For the further confirmation of this truth, we may add a Fourth instance, the fulfilling of concurring Prophecies of the Old and New Testament, which were to be accomplished after the coming of the Messiah in succeeding ages of the world; as the destruction of Jerusalem declared by Daniel*, defolate, without a term of recovery, as our Lord also foretold +, in order to the converting of the Gentiles in the days of the Gospel #. Now all those who have lived after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, have had sufficient means to be satisfied fully of the exact accomplishment of these prophecies, from the Tewish, Heathen, and other Historians, and the continued dispersion of the Jews to this very day. The fulness of the Gentiles, we know, is not yet come in; and the Jews yet continue scattered through all nations of the world. To this we may add the prophecies foretelling, That Christ should be a light to the Gentiles, and the Isles wait for his law ||. That he fall be falvation to the end of the earth; that kings shall be nursing fathers, and queens nurfing methers to Christ's Church . Now the Christian people in all ages, as may further appear in the following part of this hiftory, and we, among the rest, have had these prophecies fulfilled before our eyes. We who are in the utmost Mes of the earth have received the law of the God of Ifrael through Jefus Christ, and own ourfelves his subjects and fervants; and our sovereign princes, as well as those of other nations, profess it to be their greatest honour, that they are called nursing fathers to the Church of Christ. To this may be also added the prophecies of the New Testament, of the false Christs that were to arise to deceive many, as they did almost in every age. The defections of the Christian Church, and the perfecutions whereby it shall be tried, in spite of which it shall continue and flourish, are also distinctly foretold; that false prophets shall arise, and particularly that an Antichrist was to be set up at the breaking of the Roman Empire, who was to reign many ages, with ten kings, who were to spring out of the ruins of that empire, and to give their power to support that Antichrist; but at length were to exercise it to his destruction, as the Apostles Paul and John have foretold. All which prophecies have been fulfilled, fo far as they were to be accomplished, in the ages already past, to the conviction of every thinking and unprejudiced person, who will compare them with the history of the Church. From all which 'tis evident, that the Word of God is fo contrived, as all fucceeding ages of the world may have a plain proof, that it could proceed from no other author than the Lord of heaven and earth, wonderful in counsel, and excellent in judgment; fince what is in these books foretold, we in this generation may fee fulfilled in its proper feafons.

Fourthly, As the Scriptures are revealed by God, fo they are a revelation worthy of him; that is, they are fuch as were fit for a gracious God to give for the good of his church and people in all ages; they answer all the purposes that are requisite in a divine revelation. This demonstrates not only the truth, but also the excellency of our holy religion: and indeed these two go hand in hand together. That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are so useful, appears, because they are profitable for dostrine, for reproof, for correstion, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. They are a full store-house, containing all things necessary for our conduct and assistance in our way to heaven, as a book inspired and fent of God.

74

First, They are profitable for Dostrine. All true piety must be founded on knowledge; it cannot be pretended that this book contains all the truth might be known by reasonable men, there is a reserve for great things to be discovered in a future state. Nor does it disclose all that an infinitely wife God could have revealed, had he thought fit. Nor does it make fuch a discovery of all the doctrines it contains, as to leave no difficulties concerning them remaining. But it reveals all that's necesfary for us to know in order to our happiness. God could not have been author of fuch a book, and left out any doctrine, the knowledge of which was necessary to our falvation. Here we have a distinct knowledge of God and of ourselves, the divine nature displayed in its effential perfections, and the trinity of perfons in one divine essence, an account of the works of Creation, Providence and Redemption, enough to answer our necessity, tho' not to fatisfy our curiofity. We are there directed to our first original, certified of our happy estate, while innocent, and fully informed of our misery by our apoflacy from God. We have a distinct account of the malady, and of the remedy, by which we may reach remission of sins, and the favour of God; how we may obtain well-grounded peace of conscience at present, and certain happiness in the life to come. We are there certified of God's eternal purpose concerning the falvation of finful man, by the death of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, and are led to observe much of the wisdom of God in his gradual disclosing these purposes for the faith and hope of his fervants, from age to age. have an account of our Redeemer's wonderful incarnation, of his holy life, his miracles, the divine evidences of his milion, of his attoning death, of his glorious refurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of his father, and thence fending his spirit to his servants and apostles, and coming to judge the world at the last day. We are told how we must worship God in spirit and truth, so as to be accepted; to bonour the fon as we bonour the father, by hearty love and obedience, and to follow the conduct of his holy spirit. I cannot insist on all the doctrines there unfolded, Life and Immortality are brought to light by the Gospel*. Does any book of the world teach such a system of doctrine, except what is borrowed from this fountain? What was, or what would the world be without it? Nothing but a heap of confusion, ignorance and wickedness. This book then, that removes our ignorance, cures our confusion, and reforms us from wicked practices if we follow its conduct, is a revelation worthy of God. Secondly, The Scriptures are prositable for reproof, and conviction of any errors in the faith, and are able to determine all controversies. 'Tis the trade of the adversary of our falvation, to cast a mist over the truths God has revealed; and he never wants defigning men, as his instruments, to serve his purposes. In this case the Scripture is our standard. 'Tis proper it should be so: since 'tis divinely inspired, all ought to have recourse to it, fubmit to its decisions, and be determined by them. the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them †. By this facred rule our Lord refuted the Pharifees, who denied a refurrection ‡: By this the ancients rejected the errors of the Arians, Pelagians, Manichees, and others; and by this, to this very day, the errors of Papists, Socinians, Arminians, Quakers, Antinomians and others, are refuted: out of this magazine we are furnished with weapons against them; and without this we should be to sed to and fro with every wind of dostrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftines, whereby they lie in wait to deceive ||.

Thirdly, The Scripture is also profitable for correction; that is, for reforming the manners of men, and purging away whatever is vicious and impure. In order to this, it has a peculiar property of ransacking the hearts of men, and rectifying these inward motions. For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart . It not only forbids gross enormities, but also requires a careful abstaining from all appearance of evil*: not only forbids ribaldry, but even foolish talking and jesting †, any discourse that may stir up impure lust: not only forbids thest, but covetous desires. It warns against secret evils, from a regard to him, who searches the heart and tries the reins. It binds down a sense of guilt upon the conscience, it unmasks sin and vice, strips it of its vizards, and sets it before us in its native deformity, manifesting it to be opposite to our real good, as well as to the honour of God. It discovers sin to be the mother of sorrow, shame and death; that cheats us with imaginary pleasures, while it produces real and lasting pains, and without sincere forrowful repentance and reformation, plunges into ever-lafting mifery and torment.

^{* 2} Tim.i.10. Eph. iv. 14,

Fourt'ly, The holy Scriptures are also profitable for instruction in righteousness; that is, in every part of duty they are a perfect rule of life. The duties there urged upon us are fuch as are most becoming God to require, as tend to make us like himself in his goodness, holiness, love, mercy, justice and equity; and at the same time most reasonable for us to perform. A holy sanctified disposition of mind would dispose us for every duty, and carries its own reward along with it. We have mighty encouragements; our diligence and faithfulness draws down the divine favour, but our negligence, his wrath. We may have the affiftance of divine grace, the aids of his spirit, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase in grace, and abundant reward in heaven hereafter. We are directed, as to the faith, love, trust and obedience we owe our Maker, Preserver and Redeemer; as to the temperance, requisite in managing ourselves, and as to the justice and charity owing to our neighbours: how to behave in all conditions, stations and relations. If the infinitely wife God gave the Scripture, as his directory, it must be sufficient and complete, else it would be a reflexion on him that gave it.

Fiftbly, The Scriptures are able to make the man of God perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. Out of this facred treasure ministers are furnished for all the parts of their office; for exhortation, confolation, for demonstrating and clearing the truth, refuting error, conducting fouls in the road to heaven, and administrating discipline. Hence they are directed to instruct the ignorant, comfort the afflicted, awaken the fecure, filence gain-fayers; reduce the wandring, and form complete Christians. Not, as if the helps of human learning were to be flighted, but the holy Scriptures must have the preference; and all other helps without them will be infignificant and fruitless. These sacred writings are also able to furnish private Christians unto all good works, and to flew them what they are to believe and do. We have already feen, how infufficient philosophy and heathen learning is to teach divine truths, to reform our manners, or form us into complete virtue. But the holy word of God, the facred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, thro' the divine bleffing, which will not be wanting to them that feek it, are able to do all this: therefore they are a revelation worthy of God.

parts

A Fifth Argument to prove that the Scriptures are a most profitable revelation worthy of God, we take from this, that without these facred records we should have no certain chronology or account of time from the creation of the world to the birth of Christ, which is near 4000 years. The heathens had no account of these times, themselves being judges. Censorinus, a learned heathen, who wrote about the year of our Lord 239, (for it was when Ulpian and Pontianus were confuls, according to himself*, which coincides with that year of the Christian Æra,) says, If the time of the origin of the world had come to men's knowledge, we should begin our calculation from thence +. The time from the creation of the world to the flood, he from Varro ‡ calls αδηλον: They knew not what it was; from the flood to the first Olympiad, μυθικον or fabulous, because there was nothing but fables talked about it: but the time from the first Olympiad to his own day, he calls 'o Topiko'v, because things then transaEted acted were written in true histories. Now the first Olyman piad, according to the best Chronologers*, coincides with the year from the creation of the world 3174. Here is more than 3000 years, of which there is no historical account, no chronology among the heathens, nor can any be found but in the facred Scripture. The learned primitive Christians did not fail to twit the Pagans with this. Justin Martyr tells them +, That nothing before the Olympiads is historically writ by the Grecians with any accuracy. Theophilus Bishop of Antioch, another writer of the fecond century, fays #, Herodote, Thucydides and Xenophon, and other Historians, began their writings with the reigns of Cyrus and Darius, not being able to treat of times that were more ancient and prior to these. To which I may add, that Censorinus a heathen fays ||, The time from the beginning of mankind, or creation of the world, to the first flood, whether it had a beginning or always was, or at best, of how many years it consists, cannot be comprehended. The second period from the flood to the first Olympiad, we plainly do not know it; only 'tis believed that it did consist of about 1200 years. To which I add, that Tacitus says , The Grecians proud of their antiquities, fix upon times that are most uncertain, wherein no body can disprove them. Upon the whole I conclude, that profane histories can give no accounts of matters, or periods of time in which they were transacted, before the beginning of the Persian empire, or the deliverance of the children of Israel from the Babylonish captivity, but what's very fabulous; which shall be made more evident, before we have done with this chapter.

^{*} De natali die, cap. 21. pag. m. 155. † Ibidem, cap. 20. ad finem, Si origo mundi in hominum notitians zenisset, inde exordium sumeremus. ‡ Ibid, cap. 21. pag.m. 154.

But the facred Scripture gives a certain and infallible history of all the transactions relating to the church of God.

Ad Autolycum, pag. m. 136. impress. cum Justino, ubi supra.

De natali die, cap. 21. pag. m. 154.

^{*} Helvici Theatrum ad annum 3174. Alstedii Chronologia, pag. m. 47.

[†] Ουθεν Έλλησι πρό των Ολυμπάδων ακειβες is όρηται, operum Justini, pag. m. 13. ab mitio, Edit. Colon. 1686.

^{} Tacitus hift. lib. 2. cap. 4. Lutum antiquitatibus Gracorum genus incertæ vetustati affingit.

God, from the creation of the world and downward, with an accurate chronology of the time in which these things were acted. To give a short view of this; from the creation of the world to the flood of Noah, are 1656 years, as appears by the fifth chapter of Genesis, where the age of the Patriarchs, when they begat their eldest fons, with the age of Noah, when the flood came, Gen. vii. 6. being added together, make up the faid fum. 2dly, From the flood, to Abraham's going, in obedience to the divine call, from Ur of the Chaldees to Canaan, are 368 years, according to the account given by Moses, Genesis xi. with Chap. xii. 4. In both these articles, we follow the calculation of the Hebrew text, not that of the feventy interpreters. 3dly, From the calling of Abraham to the children of Ifrael their going out of Egypt, are 430 years, Gal. in. 17. Exodus xii. 40, 41. 4thly, From the children of Ifrail their going out of Egypt, to the building of Solomon's temple, are 480 years; which exact sum we have I Kings vi. 1. And the particulars are to be taken from the lives of Jeshua and the judges who succeeded him, and of Saul and David's reign, and the beginning of Solomon's, to the building of the temple, all upon facred record. The 5th article confifts of 430 years, from the building of Solomon's temple to the entire ruin and burning of it, in the eleventh year of King Zedekiah, to be computed by the reigns of the Kings of Israel and Judah, recorded in the first and second book of the Kings. 6thly, From the Babylonish captivity, to the commencement of Daniel's seventy weeks, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, are 133 years. 7thly, Daniel's seventy weeks, which ended when our Redeemer was cut off. Now, a day being there taken for a year, and a week prophetically for seven years, seventy weeks make four hundred and ninety years. These years in the above articles being added together, make it appear that the promised Messiah our Redemeer, died in the 3987th year from the creation of the world; from which if we withdraw 34 years for our Lord's life, his birth will be in the year 3953 from the creation. These computations are demonstrated by our learned Countryman Mr. Baillie, in his chronology *; and all of them, except some part of the 6th article, are founded upon the holy Scriptures. Providence has fo ordered, that after the beginning of the Persian Monarchy, we have some footsteps of profane authors to confirm the accomplishment of Scriptureprophecies, and the chronology of time; but before that, there is almost nothing but fables in heathen authors, or in the fragments of them that remain. 'Tis not my business to go to solve all the difficulties that may arife upon the chronology of the Scriptures. They are removed, and feeming inconfiftencies reconciled, by many criticks and chronologers +; tho' the Deists and Anti-scripturists, who of late move these objections, never look into these authors, where they have been long ago answered. The different dates of periods of time, some kings reigning jointly with their fathers, or the fon being inthroned king in his father's life-time, as will appear in a careful furvey of the reigns of the kings of Israel and Judab, and other circumstances of that kind, will remove those rubs out of the way. What I have afferted in the argument, is now plain to every unbyaffed reader, that the Scripture is the only book in the world, that gives an exact account of time, from the creation of the world to the birth of Christ. God, of his great goodness, would not leave his church in darknefs, as to the great things he had done for her, and the time in which they were transacted, but gives a clear discovery of them in his fure word of prophecy; and therefore even upon this account 'tis a revelation worthy of God.

Sixtbly, Not only are the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament from God, and worthy of him, but they are of divine inspiration. To set this argument in its proper light, I shall, 1st, state the notion of divine inspiration. 2dly, Prove that the Scriptures are so inspired. What we understand by divine inspiration, may be easily conceived, if we consider, 1st, That inspiration was an impression on the mind, or a divine impulse *, that acted those inspired persons: God touched them, and they were guided as under his influence. The glorious fovereign of heaven and earth has near access to the spirits of all his servants, and in a special manner made fuch impressions on those he selected as penmen of holy writ, as fufficed to convey the notions he intended for them, and to affift them to convey the same, so received, to others. 2dly, The impression was such, as made it certain to the persons inspired that it came from God. Abraham was fure, that God called him to offer up his only fon for a burnt-offering. 3dly, By fuch impressions as these, the penmen of those holy oracles were ftirred up to write: Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, 2 Pet. i. 21. In the whole compiling of their facred writings, the divine spirit not only immediately fuggested and dictated to them such things as were matters of pure revelation; but he illuminated their minds in the feveral doctrines and prophetical truths they delivered in writing; he refreshed their memories as to things they knew in a common way; he helped to bring forth things divinely impressed on their imagination; and fo conducted them in all their composures, as they neither omitted any thing he thought necessary or expedient, nor inferted any thing but what would ferve his purpose; but selected those things he knew would be most profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction and instruction to his people, from one age to another. Yet, 4thly, These divine impressions they were under, did not deprive the persons inspired of the use of their reason and understanding, nor did remove their feveral natures, faculties, and abilities, and the difference among them; but was fuited to the different genius of the writers. Isaiah writes as a courtier, Amos in a style more proper to a herds-man; yet both were divinely inspired. The penmen of the Scripture made use of their natural abilities,

^{*} Bailii Opus Hist. & Chronologicum, speciatim, lib. 2. pag. 34, 35. † Spanhemius, Baillie, Petavius, Nisbet, and others.

^{*} Dr. Calamy's Sermons on Inspiration, pag, 31. & seqq. VQL. I.

ties, and the Holy Spirit supplied their desects; so that the poetical books of the Old Testament, appear to be the product of study and meditation, yet are divinely inspired. 5thly, These divine impressions they were under, preserved them from error, with which all merely human writings are chargeable.

The nature of divine inspiration being thus stated, I proceed to prove, that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are so inspired. What has been already advanced, does demonstrate this truth. Who but an infinitely Holy God could endite fuch fublime and pure doctrine? Could foretel in the Old Testament the Miracles that Christ did in the New? Or could prophefy of all the great events that came to pass in the Church of God, with fuch infallible certainty? These things so recorded in the facred writings, are witnesses beyond all exception, of a mission from heaven, and of divine inspiration. Who but God could declare so exactly all the periods of time, in which great things were to be done for the Church of God, and even most of them long before they happened? These things were hid from the learned heathen world, but revealed to us by the Holy Spirit. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is therefore profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works. 'Tis not the writings of philosophers, nor the rabbinical fables of the Jews, nor popish legends, nor unwritten traditions; but the holy Scriptures make us perfect men of God, fince they are so inspired as to anfwer all these ends and purposes.

But I shall further confirm this truth. And, 1st, Since the Scriptures are true, they are divinely inspired. What has been said above, gives good evidence of the truth of the Scriptures, and more shall be afterward added to demonstrate that there can be no cheat nor forgery in any of the books thereof. Yea, we have further evidence of the truth of them, than of any other ancient writings; every knowing person owns the accounts of the Roman

History

History writ by Polybius, Livius, Suetonius, Florus, Tacitus, and other writers of that kind. They who do fo, cannot call in question the truth of our facred writers, without proclaiming themselves unreasonable. He that will take pains to read Josephus against Appian, or Eusebius's books de præparatione evangelica, will see the sacred truths have abundant collateral confirmation, as we shall afterwards take notice. Celsus and Julian, the most learned enemies to our religion, have concurred in owning the truths of the New Testament. The penmen of the Bible were as credible as any persons whatsoever; they ventured their all upon what they taught to others. Some of them were kings and princes, eminent for their figure in the world: tho' others of them were of a much meaner rank, yet they were eminent for their wisdom, piety, fincerity, and other divine endowments. They fluck not to report their own failures, or the blemishes of those whom they most extol; they were eye-witnesses to the most part of those things they report; they did not aim at wealth, honour, or worldly endowment or emolument, but rather ran the hazard of all that could be dear to them. Either then no writings are to be owned as true, or our facred writings must be acknowledged for fuch. The truth of the Scriptures being thus evident, the justness of the inference does plainly appear: If these be true, they must be divinely inspired, for they offer themselves to us as such; if they are not to be depended upon in this, they are the most delusory writings in the world, which even our adversaries dare not affert. That our facred penmen alledge they are inspired, is evident; for we are told, That holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost *. All Scripture is given by infpiration of God +. David penned the second Pfalm, but the Apostle declares, it was God, who by the mouth of bis fervant spake, Why do the heathen rage $? The Holy Ghost spake by Esaias the Prophet ||. The Apostle Paul declares, that he and his fellow-apostles speak, not in the words of man's wisdom, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth.

* 2 Peter i. 21. + 2 Tim. iii. 16. + Actsiv. 25. | Acts xxviii. 25. * 1 Corinth. ii. 13.

2 dly, The Scriptures most certainly are from God, and therefore are inspired in the sense before explained. The more we consider the matter of the Scriptures, the manner of management, their scope and design to glorify God, and the holy means they direct to for accomplishing this end; we may be the more convinced they are of God. An author they must have, not only as to particular parts, but as to the whole composure. They must either be from God, or from the devil, or from men. 'Tis impossible they can have their rise from the devil, since their great design is to overthrow his kingdom. If they came from men, these must be either good men or bad. From good men they could not come, unless divinely inspired; for they could have no goodness in them, if they came with a lye in their mouth, pretending their writings were given by the inspiration of God, when not so. Nor could our facred writings come from bad men, fince their chief business is to promote true goodness, and holiness, and to spread the honour and glory of God in the world; they must therefore have come from God. Indeed if the Scriptures had not been from God, we may be affured he would never fo remarkably have owned them, and made them so useful to fpread ferious piety over the world; he would never have inclined the most holy religious men, who have his ipirit, to lay the greatest stress on them from age to age; he would never have laid open his counsels there; he would never have fulfilled the prophecies; he would never have given the writers of these sacred books his broad feal, by endowing them with a power of working miracles. Now, fince they are from God, they must be given by inspiration; for otherwise they could not answer their end; they would not have given that undoubted certainty in sacred matters we need. We might lay stress on them, and yet be deceived.

3d/y, The harmony of the Scriptures would be inconceivable, if they were not from God by infpiration. The notions of men are commonly as different as their faces; human writings differ exceedingly; yea, a man, if he write much, may differ from himfelf. But amongst our facred writers there is a most harmonious consent. The Old Testament and the New most exactly agree: tho' feveral persons in both write on the same subjects, tho' they had different views, and one mentions what another omits; yet, to a wonder, they agree and harmonize. Our Bible is all of a piece, which is inconceivable, if the Spirit of God did not prefide over the composure; especially when we confider the different flyles of the different penmen, the variety of matter treated upon; the they have written historically, prophetically, and doctrinally, and about the sublimest, as well as the most common matters, yet they all agree. Here are doctrines, types, prophecies, histories, promises, threatnings, all depending on one another, written by feveral persons, at several times, without any possibility of combination; yet they not only agree in their account, but conspire all to promote the glory of God, in the happiness of man, through the promifed and provided Meffiab. This harmony could not be by concert, for the writers lived at feveral hundred years diftance, and could have no correspondence. They knew not one another; nay, many times they did not understand their own writings, but were forced to fearch into their meaning: and yet they all agree, because they were all inspired and guided by the fame Spirit of God.

facred

4thly, The fulfilling of the Scriptures demonstrates their inspiration. Our Lord came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil. Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall in nowise pass from the law, till all be sulfilled. Do we not find the holy Scriptures transcribed (as over again) in the course of divine providence to the church in every age, and toward particular persons in the various experiences and changes of their lives? How could the word and providence so exactly answer each other, if that were not divinely inspired, as well as this divinely directed? As to the church, how wonderfully is it preserved? How oft has it been brought low, yet kept from perishing? like the bush burning, yet not consumed. How has it been raised out of the dust? How sorely has it been visited, when impure and degenerate?

 G_3

And

And how strangely refined by the forest visitations? How certainly does it triumph in the issue over its greatest foes? And all in exact conformity to Scripture. As to particular Christians, how fully do they find the Scripture verified in their case? How does the experience of David in the book of Pfalms, and of other Saints, recorded in the book of God, agree with the experience of Christians in all ages? This were inconceivable, if God, who knows what are, shall, or can be the cases and experiences of Saints in every age of the world, had not indited that book. Saints may find the power and influence of the spirit of God, renewing their whole man, so as the understanding is not only enlightned, but also the will and affections are changed, with the whole course of the person's actions. They perceive an excellency in the law of God, they before despised. They take more pleasure in doing righteousness than formerly in doing unrighteousness, which now they cannot think of without horror. When they find all this done by the Spirit of God, according to the rule and method revealed in the Bible; this to them does prove it to be the Word of God, and is a witness, as well as miracles*. How pleafantly may Christians find promises accomplished, when they walk with God? And how awfully are the threatnings inflicted, when they depart from him. How vifibly may they observe fin punished, and sincere obedience rewarded? Now, how could this be? How could the bible contain such a series of providence, such a model of divine government, general and special, if the infinitely wife God had not a peculiar hand in its composure? answering the word in all his dispensations, God does, as it were, avouch the Scripture to be his, in the hearing of the world. He shews that he holds the reins in his own hand, and makes all things accomplish the end the Scriptures hold forth. Volumes have been profitably writ on this Subject +; but what is faid does prove that the Scriptures are inspired and revealed of God.

Tho'

^{*} John v. 36. John v. 25. 1 John v. 10. + See Mr. Fleming's rulidling of the Scriptures, in three Parts. vate Chr. stian's Witness to Christianity.

Tho' what has been already advanced does demonstrate the authority of the facred Scriptures, yet fince the weight of the subject requires, and the nature thereof admits many kinds of proof, and in opposition to the notions of the modern deifts, who fet their mouth against the heavens, and mock at divine revelation as a cheat: I shall prove that no part of Scripture could be forged, and that the whole deferves intire credit. These sacred books have not only abundance of intrinfick proof in their own bosom, but also a collateral confirmation from the testimony of others.

I begin with the five books of Moles, which the church of the Jews did own in the days of Christ, and in all their fcatterings to this day, to be the Word of God given by Moses. If these books be not true, they are the most notorious cheat imaginable. But these books are such, and the history they contain fo related, that it is impossible for Moses, in the time of his life, to have made them pass for true, among the Israelites, as the law of God, had they been forged. And it must also be impossible for any person, since that time, to impose such a cheat upon that nation and church*. That Moses could not have put fuch a cheat upon them, is evident, because the matters of fact related, from the 5th chapter of Exodus, ver. 1. to the last chapter of Deuteronomy, are things, for the most part, said to be done before the sun, in the fight of Israel, or of the Egyptians and them together; and they could, by their very fenses, know and judge the truth of them: As, the plagues on the Egyptians, the dividing the red fea, and leading through the people of Israel more than 600000 men, beside women and children; the pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night, that appeared to them, and led them 40 years through the wilderness; the miraculous Manna by which they were fed for the same space; the quails, and water out of the rock; the glorious appearance of God in giving the law on mount Sinai, and many fuch like miracles; G 4 togetogether with Moses's rehearfing the law, civil and sacred, making the tabernacle with all its parts and instruments, fettling the priesthood in the family of Aaron, with the laws thereto belonging. Now if all these things were not done, as recorded in the books of Moses, it was impossible the Iraelitis in his time could believe or receive them; for every man, woman, and child, capable of discerning, must have clearly seen the cheat, and known all the matter of fact to be false, and therefore would certrinly have rejected or destroyed both Moses and his books; especially since they were so unwilling to submit to these laws, or receive them at his hand, as the history fully declares, fince he appeals to their fenses for the truth of all these great acts of the Lord, Deut, xi. 1-9. and that he wrote all these things in a book, and delivered them to the priefts and elders of Ifrael, Deut. xxxi. 1—9. and they received them. Upon the whole, 'tis evident, that what is contained in the Pentateuch, from Exed. v. 1. to Deut. xxxiv. could not have been imposed upon the Ifraelites by Moles; and if the far greater part of these five books could not have been forged, or imposed on the Israelites in the time of Moses, no more could the preceeding part of them, because it agrees exactly with the rest, and is confirmed by the same miracles which prove his divine mission.

* Mr. John Simpson, Professor of Divinity, his Demonstration of the Divine Authority of the Scriptures.

As the Jews could not have been engaged to receive these books, if forged, in the time of Moses, so neither could they, since his time or Christ's, been imposed upon by them, if the matters of fact there related were salse; because in whatever age they may be supposed to have been forged, the cheat must have been discovered: which will appear, First, Because that remarkable deliverance of the people from Egypt, bringing them through the red sea and the wilderness, and putting them in possession of the land of Canaan, were matters of fact so remarkable, which must have been so carefully noticed and remembred by posterity, as they could not readily forget them. At what time then this part of the story is supposed to be forged, it must be look'd upon, by all knowing men, as an extravagant sable, since in that case no perfon could have any notice of it, before the forged flory appeared.

Secondly, In these books of Moses is contained an intire fystem of the laws of the Israelites, civil and sacred, confirmed by fo many miracles of mercy and judgment, to be observed under the highest penalty, from the time Moses published them: Which laws, the history of Mofes, and the succeeding prophets among the fews, teach us, they with great difficulty submitted to and observed, yet were obliged thereto by many remarkable providences of judgment and mercy. Now it was as impossible for any person whatsoever to forge and impose on the people of Ifrael fuch a fystem of laws, civil and facred, especially when faid to be established by such wonderful works of God, as 'tis now for any man to impose upon us in this nation, or any other people, a fystem of laws, civil and facred, and to perfuade us that these laws were given our ancestors by Almighty God, and that our forefathers, from one generation to another, and we ourselves, were remarkably plagued for flighting of them.

Thirdly, The great folemnities which were to be observed through all generations, in memory of the miraculous delivery from Egypt, and the other mighty acts of God in bringing them to the land of Canaan, founded on God's will, and committed to writing at the time of their first institution, shut the door against all forgery in all future ages; especially considering the book containing these rules, was at that time committed to the custody of the priests and elders of Israel, Deut. xxxi. 9. and their sovevereign princes were appointed each of them to have a copy of the book, Deut. xvii. 18-20. by them, to be kept fafe, for the use of the following generation, whereby it was impossible such solemn observances could creep in among them by degrees, and afterwards be established by subsequent laws, as is the fate of those, who observe fuch folemnities from oral tradition. These solemn obfervances were the circumcifion, the paffover, daily facrifices, new moons, fabbaths, and folemn feaft-days, the great day of attonement, the year of the jubilee, &c. In each of these many outward performances are required, and the whole rules of those laborious services contained in the books of Moses, which God gave to his people, to teach them the same and other precepts, and that they might never be imposed upon by human inventions.

and

Fourthly, The many standing monuments, which we are told of in the books of Moses, that were left among the people of Israel as a testimony of the truth of those things writ there, as the office of priesthood in the family of Aaron, exclusively of all the families of the tribes of Ifrael, which the people unwillingly submitted to; the tabernacle, with all its parts, furniture and instruments; some of these, as the mercy-seat, and candlefticks of inimitable workmanship, and vast expence, all particularly described and approved in the books of Moles; the high-priest's Garments, the Urim and Thummim, and serpent of brass, made by the same order. Now the tabernacle and all its veffels, as being of constant use, from the time of Moles, to the building of Solomon's temple, was a standing proof of the truth of the book that prescribes them, where the authentick copy of it was reposited. At whatever time then we can suppose the books of Moses to have been forged, we must suppose the tabernacle and those other ornaments to have been made, and at the same time to have been things never before heard of, whereby the cheat would be manifest to every body.

Fiftbly, All the following books of the Old Testament do either suppose, or affert the books of Moses to contain the oracles of God. For as to their doctrinal part, they are only an explication of these laws, or exhortations to observe them, confirmed with promises of mercy, and denunciations of judgment. The history they contain, is only the continuation of that in the books of Moses, declaring how the Jews in following ages, for above 1000 years did obey or transgress these laws, and how they were favoured on their obedience, or punished for their transgressions. Which being all wrote about the time when the matters of fact there recorded were done, the several authors do appeal for the truth of what they wrote, to the pulick records of the kingdom then extant, which Chap. 1. the Books of Moses. 91 by many instances we find more exactly registred, and kept among these eastern princes, than commonly in our days, among the princes of Europe. Now, since these books contain the history of the Jew sh Church from the death of Moses, and beginning of Joshua's government, throughout all the following ages, without any interval, till the third year of the reign of A taxerxes, king of Persia; these books being true, 'tis not only impossible the books of Moses should, during that time, be forged and imposed upon the Jews, but they must certainly be genuine, and really owned and received by certainly be genuine, and really owned and received by the people, as the law of God given by Moses. If we suppose the books of Moses to be forged, the whole books of the Old Testament must be false, and imposed on the Jews; which is a thing impossible to be done, even fupposing them to be the most barbarous of nations. The more books of the Old Testament Deists can suppose to be counterfeit, more easily should the cheat have been discovered by any of sense among that people, and the more unwillingly should they have received these books, as the oracles of God; because, as the history proceeds, there is still a greater discovery made of their unthankfulness to God, and their rebellion against him, and heavier independent and the fact the fact that and heavier judgments poured out on them for the fame. Befides, a larger thread of the history containing a fuccession of their judges, kings, and rebellions in Church and State, would have made the cheat more hateful and apparent.

Sixtbly, The books of Moses could not have been either entirely forged, or made up with alterations, after the return from the Babylonish captivity, by Ezra, or any body else about his time, as some alledge without reason: And that ist, Because Ezra himself in the third chapter of his book, Ver. 2---5. does almost in express terms affirm, that Joshua the son of Joseph and Zerubabel brought with them the writings of Moses from Babylon, in the first year of Cyrus. The same is imported Ezra vi. 18——21. where they offered sacrifices, and kept folemn feasts according to the law of Moses. They had at the fame time the book of Jeremish, 2 Chron.

2 Chron. xxxvi. 22. Ezra i. 1. Daniel also had it at Babylon, Dan. ix. 2. They had the laws concerning the courses of the priests delivered by David, king of Israel, according to the Spirit of God, 1 Chron. vi. compared with Ezra iii. 10. From all which it appears, that it was impossible for Ezra either to have forged the law anew, or to have made any alterations in it; for whenever he should have attempted any such thing, either the history of his own book, declaring the books of Moses were brought back with Joshua and Zerubabel, would have been found out to be a notorious cheat and salshood, by which all his credit with that people would have been lost; or else those copies of the law, brought back with Tolhua, would at least have been found with the priests in the temple, as of standing force and daily practice, by which they would examine any new copy he could offer, and could not but perceive the smallest difference. 2dly. The great numbers of those who had seen the former temple, who were still alive, when the foundation of the fecond temple was laid, Ezraiii. 12. who could not be ignorant of the laws that were kept on record, and were in force until the destruction of the first temple, were as fo many checks to any that would adventure to forge a new law, or alter the old. 3dly, They brought back 5400 vessels of gold and filver, Ezra i. 11. which had been carried out of the temple at Ferusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and restored by Cyrus; which vessels must have been known by the ancient priefts then alive, who had formerly made use of them in the temple-service, and the orders of the priests of the family of Aaron, being observed by Joshua and Zerubabel. All this makes it more impossible to impose upon them a new law. 4thly, The precepts against marriages with the heathen, were plainly broken by the Fews, exprefly against the law of Moles, and they were drawn into the abominations of the heathen, in which trespass their princes and rulers were chief, Ezraix. 1, 2. with their Priests and Levites. Now it was impossible for Ezra to have forged, or even to have altered the law of Moles, which the princes, rulers and priefts had broken. This was a tender point, wherein the interest of their families, and affection of their wives was nearly concerned, so as they must have been engaged to examine with the greatest niceness all the copies of the law, that Ezra could offer: yet we find they were so far from opposing Ezra's command in this matter, that they acknowledged their transgression, and chearfully joined with Ezra in putting away this great abuse; and abandoned the strange wives they had taken, with their children. Yea, all of them high and low, allow their names to be recorded for the instruction and warning of posterity, Ezra, Chap. x. All this could proceed from nothing, but the unquestionable proof they had, that the writings extant among them under Moses's name, were the law of God delivered to their fathers, for the breach whereof they had been severely punished in Babylon; and all this demonstrates it was impossible for Ezra, or any other, to have forged or altered the law of Moses.

Seventbly, The law of Moses could not have been forged or changed, betwixt the days of Ezra and our Redeemer's incarnation. This is but a natural confequence of the former; for if the books of Ezra and Nehemiab were true history, and extant among the people of the Jews, from Ezra's days to Christ, they must also have had the books of Moses and other books of the Old Testament, which rendred it impossible for any to forge all these books, considering the laws, miracles, and history of Church and State contained in them. We are also told in the book of Maccabees *, and by Josephus +, while they give an account of the state of the Jews, during that period, that they had always among them the law of Moses, which they most religiously observed, even in the face of the most cruel persecution, which they met with under Antiochus Epiphanes, and would not have done for observing any law newly brought in among them. This further appears, by confidering that they had the traditions of the elders, which they very superstitiously obferved ferved in the days of our Saviour ‡, by some of which they made void the law of God. From which it appears, that fince the law contained in the books of Moses and the prophets, had been by their fathers esteemed the unalterable law of God, which they were not to add to nor di-minish from; that even when corruption in worship and manners crept in among them, that law was efteemed fo facred, that no person durst adventure to change it; but they devised an oral law, to be handed down by oral tradition, where they had liberty, without danger of being discovered, to add traditions, that might countenance their present corruptions: which fort of law the Jews maintain to this very day, and have gathered the precepts of it into a body, called Mischnajoth. Even as the Church of Rome finding it impossible to forge any new books, under the name of Christ and his Apostles, or alter the genuine books, have betaken themselves to tradition, which they pretend to have been delivered from father to fon by word of mouth, from the Apostles time to this very day. From all these things set together, it may be evident to any thinking person, that the books under Moses's name are truly what they pretend to be, the law of God delivered by Moses to the people of Israel in the wilderness, and could not possibly have been forged in any period of time before the appearance of Christ: and the providence of God, the multitude of copies, and the care of Jews and Christians, have transmitted them fafe to us to this very day.

^{*} Mace, i. 29. Ibid, ii. 5——11. Ibid, vii. 6,———30; † Antiquitat, Lib. 12. cap. 7.

Beside what has been already discoursed, which does sully prove the authority of the books of Moses, I may add some further arguments to confirm the same. 1st, From the personal qualifications of this prophet; he writes with great sincerity. There is nothing more common among heathen authors, than to magnify beyond measure the glorious actions of the great men of their own nation, to boast of their merits, and to disguise their saults. With what praises did they honour their first benefactors and heroes? They did not only exalt them above mankind, but they deisied them after their death; they erected statues, built temples and al-

Mat.v. 21-27. Mark vii. 7-13.

220t.

Chap. 1. the Books of Moses. tars to them, addressed prayers, offered rich presents, and in some places sacrificed even human victims to them. But with what fincerity does the prophet Moses write the history of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with their children? He gives an impartial relation of the glorious actions they did, and of the faults they committed, without any difguise. He dissembles not the envy and murmuring of Miriam his fifter *, nor the abominable idolatry of Aaron his brother +, tho' he was high-prieft; yea, he discovers his own unadvised words !. and the doubts of his own mind, which none, before he opened them, (but God only) could know. Nothing could oblige him to feign or diffemble. The truth he was ordered to fet down, was the only motive he proceeded upon; the execution of God's commands, the only glory he fought after; and a happy immortality, the only reward he aspired to. Moses's modesty is no less unquestionable than his sincerity: he was a person of admirable beauty, trained up from his infancy, till he was 40 years old, in Pharach's court, as a fon of the royal princess, educated in all the wisdom and learning of the Egyptians, under the best masters they could have any where, as the heir apparent of the crown: and, if we may believe Philo, he commanded numerous armies of that nation , and obtained great victories, according to Josephus; yet is so far from the vanity of making any long narrative of his own preferments, or the dignities to which he was advanced, and of the great acts he did, as he passes them all over in silence; but on the contrary, he does not conceal his keeping the flock of his father-in-law, Jethro, in Midian ||||. Is this the style of an historian, who writes upon worldly designs and selfish motives? Where is one profane writer in whom the like modesty appears? Neither did Moses seek his own interest. 'Tis an old and good observation of Philo  That Moses was the only prince who ever governed a people, that did not gather gold or silver into his coffers, who did not exact tribute, nor found palaces nor possessions, gather fervants, riches nor revenues, having nothing of pride either in food or clothing, but the simplicity and frugality of a private man; only he was adorned with the royal endowments of fortitude, sobriety, diligence, prudence, wisdom, patience, justice, contempt of all earthly pleasures, exhorting all his people to virtue, appointing punishments for transgressors, and rewards for the obedient. 'Tis evident he was so unconcerned with the preferment of his own family, and fo wholly possessed with a desire faithfully to execute the commission he had received from heaven, that he settled the office of high-prieft in the family of his brother, and made choice of Joshua his fervant to conduct the people, after he was gone, and introduce them into the promifed land, and left not his own children any honourable office or prerogative, but that only of simple Levites. can be inferred from fuch a method of proceedure, but that Moses acted only by the direction of God?

^{} De vita Moss, lib. 1. pag. m. 15.

A fecond argument to confirm the authority of the books of Moses may be taken from the laws he enacted. The ten commandments respect all mankind, without any distinction of age, sex, or condition. The four first regard our duty to God. The other fix our duty to our neighbour. We are obliged to love God, with all our heart, all our might, and our neighbour as ourselves. Whatfoever we would not that men should do to us, these we are not to do to them. The magistrate is honoured, the people's interest preserved, and our happiness, if we obey these laws, secured. There is more divine wisdom shines in them, than in all the laws enacted by Dracon, Solon, Lycurgus, Numa, or any other of the heathen law-givers. The worship of the heathen deities is dwindled into nothing. The wisdom of the Egyptians, Assyrians, Greeks and Romans, could not preserve their gods from annihilation: their Isis, Bel, Jupiter, Ceres, Minerva, Mars, and the rest, are forgotten; tho' we know their names, they ferve for nothing but amusing children, as Juvenal faid * of the famous Carthaginian general.

^{*} Juvenal. Satyr. 10. ver. 167. Ut pueris placeas & declamatio fias.

neral. But the knowledge and worship of the true God, taught by Moses, has subsisted from the beginning of the world to this day, through all revolutions of ages, notwithstanding all the opposition of the powers of the earth, the wiles of the devil, and the fury of idolatry and superstition, which could never ruin nor obscure it. On the contrary, it has arrived to a greater perfection by the light of the Gospel, being not now shut up among the Jews in fuch a narrow corner, as the land of Judea, but spread over the world, to turn all men from darkness to light, and from the service of satan, to the service of the living God. The laws of Moses are more holy and pure than those of any other nations; they forbid those fins permitted by others, as hating our brother in our heart +; avenging or bearing grudge at the children of our own people; the exposing of infants; simple fornication, and many other evils of the like nature. They condemn all forts of fuperstition, with which other nations were filled; they reject all kind of magick inchantments, auguries and divinations, and distinction of lucky and unlucky days. How can this law be but holy, which proceeds from an infinitely holy and wife God, who only knows what is best for his people? Even the ceremonial law, tho' exceedingly burdensome, was very useful to separate betwixt Jews and Gentiles, to distinguish between the severity of the law and the freedom of the Gospel, to try the Jews obedience, and to point out the Messiah to come, of whom it was a type and shadow. The very burdens of the law did evidence the divine institution thereof. How could the Jews have fubmitted to fuch a painful ordinance as circumcifion, to fuch expensive sacrifices, to consecrate to God the firstfruits of their ground, and the first-born of their cattle, and to redeem those which were forbidden to be sacrificed, had they not believed these laws came from God, who would feverely punish the transgression of them, and been eye-witnesses to the great miracles wrought by Moles to confirm the fame? To be fure fuch fuch an impatient, quarrelfome, stiff-necked, and rebellious people, as the Jews were, would never have submitted to these burdensome ceremonies, but on this account.

⁺ Lev. xix. 17, 18.

There are two laws among others, which well deferve our ferious confideration. The first is, that Levitic. xxv. 1. to the end, which ordained the land should rest every teventh year, tho' he permitted every one to eat that which it should produce of itself, without labour, and forbid them at the fame time to make any provision for that year. And 'tis remarkable the law commands the fame thing as to the year of jubilee, which was the next after the seventh sabbatick year; so at that time the land rested two years successively. The second law we remark, is that which enjoins all the males to appear in that place, where the tabernacle was to be, three times a year, Exodus xxiii. 14-18. viz. at the passover, at pentecost, and at the feast of tabernacles. Now, can it be imagined, that Moses, who was a prudent learned man, and a great politician, who loved the people whom he governed tenderly, would appoint fuch laws, if God had not positively commanded him to do it? Is there any country in the world, how fruitful foever it be, tho' not half fo much peopled as anciently Judea was, that would fuffer all the land to rest every seventh year, and sometimes for two years together? Is there any state encompassed on all hands with powerful, valiant, and implacable enemies, that would ftrip naked three times a year all their frontiers of all the males, from 20 years old to upwards of 50 or 60? Surely there is not any sovereign in the midst of enemies, as the Israelites were, so imprudent as to observe such a conduct; and therefore 'tis even morally impossible, that Moses should ever think of making fuch laws, which would infallibly produce, in a very little time, the utter ruin of the commonwealth, according to the natural course of things, unless God had given him an express command to do so; and assured him, as he informs us, that in the years preceding the fabbatick, the land should produce a double or triple crop: and during the time when men were absent from their cities, attendattending the worship of God, their enemies should not attempt to conquer them, as in fact they never did.

To confirm the authority of the books of Moses, I add a third argument from their antiquity. The long lives of the patriarchs before the flood of Noah, and also from his time to that of the children of Israel's going down to Egypt, made it practicable for a few men to transmit the knowledge of God to their posterity for above two thousand years: but when the age of men was shortned, in the days of Moses*, to almost the same period as at present, it was necessary that God's mind, for the government of his church, should be committed to writing. Moses began to write these divinely inspired books, after he was called to the prophetick office, about the year from the creation of the world 2450. The book of Genesis contains a narrative of 2369 years, without which we should have been in darkness concerning all those great events there recorded; tho' it be an history of times before Moses, yet all is divinely inspired, and therefore infallible. Moses might have memoirs of these periods of time from fuch as did go before him, and was guided in the whole composure by the unerring spirit of God. The Israelites were assured of the truth of the whole by the wonderful miracles he wrought, and the other proofs of a divine mission God gave him in their view. As for the rest of Moses's books, they are of things done in that age, of which themselves had been witnesses, as has been already demonstrated. Now there is no profane history extant, that I know of, except some dubious fragments, but what was writ after the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon, a thousand years almost after Moses's time. Herodote, whom Cicero calls the father of history, he being even at that time counted the most ancient historian, wrote but about the time of Xernes the Persian's war against Greece, 450 years before the birth of Christ, 3480 years after the creation of the Thucydides and Xenophon wrote feveral years after him, and continue his history. There is no Egy tian, Chaldean, Persian, nor Scythian history extant: all the H 2 accounts accounts we have of their affairs, are from the Greeks, who, as Juvenal of old observed, were bold to put great salshoods into history*. The Roman historians are yet of a later date; most of them wrote but about the Augustan age, near to the time our Redeemer was born, and many of them long after that. The books of Berofus, who wrote the Chaldean; Manetho, the Egyptian; and Metasthenes, the Indian history; are all lost, and basely counterfeited by Annius of Viterbo: but tho' they were extant, they were but wrote in the reign of Ptolemæus Philadelphus, about 300 years before the birth of Christ. As then the holy Scriptures are by feveral hundred years the most ancient book in the world; so indeed we have no history that can be depended upon for 3000 years, but what we have in these sacred writings, as before proved +; and these Scriptures being received as a divine revelation, do carry great evidence of their authority, the first revelation being the Criterion and Rule of all that follow. God would not fuffer the ancientest books of religion in the world, to pass under the notion and title of a revelation, without caufing fome discovery to be made of the imposture, if there were any in it; much lefs would he preferve it by a particular and fignal providence for fo many ages, and make it retain its authority against all the opposition of devils and men. God did first establish his own truth, to which mankind might still have recourse, and by which, as a standard, all delusions might be tried.

For further confirming and illustrating this argument, I shall take a little view of those nations, who have greatest pretences to antiquity, and show that they are neither so great, nor so well sounded, and in a word, not to be compared with these of the Jews in the sacred Scriptures. Particularly we shall consider the antiquities of the Egystians, Phenicians, Chaldeans, Grecians, Romans, Scythians, and Chinese.

As

^{* . —} Quicquid Gracia mendax
Audet in historia — Satyr. 10. ver. 174.
† See Pag. 77, 78.

As to the Phenicians, their only famous ancient historian we hear of, is Sanchoniathon, but he is lost. Philo Biblius, in the reign of the Emperor Adrian, about the beginning of the fecond Century, translated him into Greek, and altered many Phenician names, to make them more agreeable to the palate of the Greeks. His translation is also lost. It seems to have been extant in the time of Eusebius, bishop of Casarea, for he has preserved a few fragments of it *; where we find Sanchoniathon received his information concerning these affairs from 7erombaal, priest of the god Jevi; and he dedicated his work to Abibalus, king of the Berytians. If this Jerombaal be the same with Gideon, who in Scripture is called Jerubbaal, he is still 182 years short of Moses; but if Abibalus, to whom he dedicates his history, be father to Hiram, contemporary with Solomon, as feems more probable +, then Sanchoniathon will be 480 years later than Moles. The fragments that are preserved, are full of strange fables, valuable for nothing but some account of the Phenician idolatry, which we shall take some notice of in the fecond chapter of this effay. The learned Dr. Cumberland, bishop of Peterborough, in his Phenician history, printed in the year 1720, has bestowed pains on these fragments, where it appears the generations recorded by Sanchoniathon, and the genealogies of Moses in the fifth and eleventh chapters of Genesis, do agree. Upon the whole, neither is Sanchoniathon, if intire, to be compared with the authority or antiquity of the books of Moses; neither does he weaken his authority, but is rather fome fcraps borrowed from Moses's writings, and mixed with a heap of fables.

As to the Egyptian antiquities, they were a people for unaccountably given to fables, that the wifest action they did, was to conceal their religion, and the best office of their gods to hold their fingers in their mouths, and enjoin silence to all who came to worship them. I shall, in the following chapter, discourse of their idolatry:

H 3 other

^{*} De præpar. Evangelica, lib. 1. cap. 9.

[†] Vide Joseph. contra Appionem, lib. primo.

other heathens laughed at it; and 'tis a glaring proof of the greatness of the degeneracy and apostacy of man. Egypt was certainly an ancient kingdom, and the best evidence of their antiquity is in the sacred Scripture. The Dynasties of the reigns of the gods and demi-gods among them are plainly fabulous. Thus far it may be granted, that Mifraim, the fon of Cham, called by profane authors Menes, settled among them, and was their first king. Hence Egypt in Scripture is called the land of Ham*; his fuccessors were commonly called Pharaohs, as the first emperors of the Romans were called Cæsars. These Pharaohs did reign in Egypt for about 600 years; and after this, princes of their own, till their kingdom was dissolved, and became a prey to the Persians, Grecians, and after them, to the Romans; and last of all to the Saracens and Turks. But where is their ancient hiflory? As to Manetho, he is lost; tho' he were extant, no credit can be given him. He was priest of Heliopolis, and wrote in the Greek language a history of the feveral Dynasties of Egypt, from the beginning he ascribes to that kingdom, to the fixteenth year of Artaxerxes Ochus +: fince which time Egypt has had no king of its own, but was subject to foreigners. He dedicated his book to Ptolemæus Philadelphus ‡. Dr. Stilling fleet proves that the LXX interpreters translated the Bible in the beginning of Philadelphus's reign; that Manetho and Berosus wrote fome years after them; and that there might be some history of other nations, as well as of the Jews, depofited in the famous Alexandrian library ||. The world, as he also observes , was then awakened into greater inquisitiveness after knowledge, and Providence did give the inquisitive world a taste of truth at present, to stay their stomachs, and prepare them for a further discovery of it afterwards. In order to this, the nation of the Yews, which was an enclosed garden before, was now thrown open,

^{*} Psal. cv. 23. † Eutebn Chronicon ad annum Ochi decimum fextum. Prideaux's Conniction, Vol. 1. ad annum 350. ante Christum.

[#] Ibid. ad annum 247. ante Christum.

^{} Ibid. pag. 47; Origines facræ, lib. 1. cap. 2, 3.

open, and many of its lights fet in foreign countries; not only at Babylon, where, after their return, were left three famous schools of learning, Sera, Pombeditha, and Neharda; but in Egypt too, where multitudes of them, by Alexander's favour, were fettled at Alexandria: from which fountains, knowledge came to the rest of the world, whereby God did make way for the knowledge of him-felf, to be further propagated by the Gospel. To return to Manetho, how can he, a writer of so late a date, who had no Egyptian records before him, be credited concerning his Dynasties of 53535 years*; especially since, as appears by Syncellus +, he took his history from some fillars in the land of Seriad, in which they were inscribed in the facred dialect, by the first Mercury Thoth, and after the flood were translated out of the facred dialect into the Greek tongue, in hieroglyphick characters, and are laid up in books among the revestries of the Egyptian temple, by Agathodæmon the second Mercury, the father of Tat. Can any thing be liker a fable than this? How could these pillars stand and be legible after the flood, which overthrew all buildings and monuments? How could Manetho transcribe Dynasties for above 50000 years, from facred infcriptions of Thath, who lived in the beginning of the first Dynasty? Did he prophesy an intire history of so many years to come? How could this history be transcribed from hieroglyphick characters, which are not letters, but reprefentations of things? How could it be written in any tongue, when it was written in hierogly-phicks? Where is this land of Seriad? Josephus Scaliger, that learned and inquisitive man, says, He knows | not how the second Mercury, or Agathodæmon, could translate this into Greek so soon after the flood, when the Greek tongue was not then known, far less admitted into Egypt. Tho' Manetho be lost, his Dynasties are preserved, being epitomized by Julius Africanus, from him transcribed by Eusebius, from him by Georgius Syncellus, and others. But how little to be depended upon, we have already feen. H 4.

Herodote

^{*} Origines facræ, pag. 36.

[†] Apud Syncellum, pag. 40. inter scriptores Byzantinos. Notæ in Euseb. pag.408.

Herodote and Diodorus Siculus have some account of Egyptian affairs, which they learned from the priests of that country, who might easily impose upon them, who had no knowledge of the Egyptian tongue. These authors have advanced several contrarieties and inconsistencies, as our learned countryman, once my good friend, has made appear *. In short, tho' some great men have made too much noise concerning Egyptian antiquities, yet what have we from them, but bare names of kings, and many of these fabulous, and some vast pyramids and labyrinths transmitted to posterity? The Egyptians had no records, no documents of any true history, but thought it easy to deceive the Greeks with any fabulous narration they pleased.

As to the Chaldean antiquities, (where I shall add some things concerning the Egyptian;) Berofus, who, as Tatian, an author in the fecond century, fays +, was a Babylonian, a priest of Jupiter Belus, and lived in the age of Alexander the Great, and dedicated three books of Chaldean history to Antiochus the third after Alexander, who must be Antiochus Thros. and so wrote much about the fame time with Manetho. His book is loft, only fome fragments of it are preserved by Josephus t, and Eusebius ||. Divine Providence has transmitted to us the books of facred Scripture pure and intire; but as to these books of Sanchoniathon the Phenician, Manetho the Egyptian, and Berofus the Chaldean, they are all mangled and lost: and tho' they had been extant, were not of fo great antiquity, authority, nor use. To return, Berosus rivalled the Egyptians with antiquities of vast extent; for Cicero tells us , The Chaldeans pretended to accounts of 47000 years, tho, fays he, they are to be condemned either of folly, impudence, or vanity; we judge they lye, and are not afraid of the censure of subsequent ages. Indeed Tully is in the right; for they had no certain records, knew nothing of the origin of the world, and therefore imagined what ^{*} Spicilegia antiq. Ægypt. cap. 15, 16.

⁺ Tatianus Affyrius, pag. 171. printed with Justin, Edit. 1686.

[#] Contra Appionem, lib. 1. || De Præp. Evang. lib. 10.
 De Divinatione, lib. 1. § 36.

what they pleased. Hence rose those vain contests between the Chaldeans, Scythians, Egyptians, and Ethiopians, concerning the antiquities of their feveral nations, where none of them infift upon records, but upon feveral probabilities, arising from the nature of their country, and the climate they lived under. Justin, from Trogus, says *, The Egyptians being defeated by these arguments, the Scythians appeared to be the more ancient people. Had they had any records, Psammiticus would not have been obliged to that ridiculous way of deciding the controversy by his two infants, bred up by a shepherd, without converse with men; concluding that the language they spoke first, would manifest the great antiquity of that nation it belonged to. Accordingly the word they first uttered being Becos, and fignifying bread in the Phrygian tongue, these Phrygians were counted older than the Egyptians +. Either Herodote, who tells this story, was deceived, or the Egyptians yielded their cause very easily; for 'tis more than probable the infants had spoken none at all, had they not learned the inarticulate voice of goats they had more converse with, than men. The weakness of this argument declares they had no annals nor history to prove their antiquity by, in these times; else they had appealed to these, rather than to such strange means of probation.

Moreover, the Egyptians and Chaldeans had no Epocha's of chronology, no diffinct periods of time, not so much as a fixed account of their year, using lunar years; sometimes taking three or four months, and sometimes one month for a year. Diodorus Siculus, who travelled into Egypt, and writes at large concerning their affairs, says ‡, That from Osiris and Isis to Alexander's government, who built a city in Egypt, called by his own name, are numbred by some 10000 years, or, as others write, little less than 23000. Afterwards he says ||, The Egyptian priests make a computation from the government of the Sun, to Alexander's passing into Asia, of about 23000 years. Moreover, in their fables 'tis said, The most ancient of the gods did reign 1200, but the later ones not above 300 years. Now since that number of years exceeds all credit, some are not afraid to affirm, that of old the motion of the Sun not being known, the year was described by the circuit of the Moon. Therefore, when the year was of thirty days, some might live a thousand years; since now when the year consists of twelve months, not a few live above an hundred years. The like may be said of those who are reported to have reigned 300 years; for in their time the year was complete in four months, the folar year having as many months in its seasons, spring, summer, and winter. In-deed the year was scarce well fixed and regulated in the heathen world, till the time of Julius Cafar. But of all countries, we are most uncertain of the Egyptian year. If four months be a short year, one lunar month is still shorter; yet we are affured by authors of good credit, that in Egypt one month was counted a year. Varro, as cited by Lastantius*, gives this account of the great age of some men in ancient times, who are supposed to have lived a thousand years, That among the Egyptians, a month is esteemed a year; that the circuit of the Sun, thro' the twelve Signs, does not constitute their year, but the Moon performing her course in thirty days. Plutarch says +, That the Egyptians had at first but one month, which afterwards they divided into four, according to the seasons of the year. This seems to be the reason why they reckon so great a number of years, because they count these months instead of years. According to this computation, the Egyptian Dynasties may be reduced to some nearer proportion to truth, of which Dr. Stilling fleet makes a calculation |. But among such a confused heap of uncertainties, I humbly conceive 'tis difficult to find truth. We must go to the standard of the Word of God for it.

^{*} Hist. lib. 2. cap. 1. + Herodot. lib. 2. ab initio. ‡ Bibl. Hist. lib. 1. cap. 23. | Ibid. cap. 26.

Now I proceed to take a little view of the Greek antiquities. Tho' the Romans, and most of the heathen world received their learning from Greece, yet the Greeks themselves have no ground to boast of any great antiquity.

^{*} De origine erroris, lib. 2. cap. 13. pag. m. 174. + Life of Numa, Engl. Edit. 1683. pag. 249.

Origines facræ, lib. 1. cap. 5.

ty. Tis agreed both among learned Heathens * and Christians +, that Cadmus, son of Agenor, king of Phenicia, who went to Beotia, and built Thebes, or at least the castle called Cadmea, was the first who brought letters into Greece. Herodote fays particularly ‡, " That "there were no letters in Greece, in his opinion, till " Cadmus brought them, and that three old inferiptions were extant, in his time, in Phenician letters." Now letters were known among the Jews long before this time. Moses makes use of them as commonly known in his days. Job appears by his long life, to have been before Moses; yet his book is written in the same characters. He wishes ||, Oh that my words were now written, that they were printed in a book. 'Tis highly probable that this noble art was before the flood, or given by God to his Church foon after it. To discover the novelty of the Greek Learning, the question is, when Cadmus lived, who first brought letters into Greece. Now the Greeks have not any thing of greater antiquity than the wars of Troy; and I own 'tis not easy peremptorily to fix the time, when things were done in that sabulous age: but I conceive the opinion of the learned Theophilus Bishop of Antioch, who flourished in the second century, probable , That the Trojan war was about the time, when Solomon built the temple at Jerusalem. Our countryman Mr. Cooper says + +, Perhaps the wars of Troy were later than Rehoboam's days: For Appian in Libyc. fays, Dido (I think 'tis the Phenicians, Zorus and Charcedon) built Carthage 50 years before the wars of Troy. Now Carthage was built 851 years before Christ; so that by this account of Appian's, Troy has been destroyed 800 years before Christ, 30 years almost before the first Olympiad, about 50 years before Rome was built, namely, about the ninth year of Uzziah, or Azariah king of Judah, the ninth from Rehoboam; to which may be accommodated ^{*} Herodot, Lib. 5. cap. 59. Diodorus Siculus, Lib. 3. cap. 67. † Euseb. Præp. Evang. Lib. 10. cap. 5. ‡ Loco citato.

[|] Job xix.23.  Ad Autolycum, Lib. 3. pag. m. 131. Edit. 1686, cum Justino Martyre.

^{+ +} Essay on the Chronology of the World, pag. 79.

Diodorus, placing the destruction of Troy in the fifth king's reign, as I takeit, after Sesostris, viz. in the reign of Proteus. 'Tis all one to our point which of these opinions be embraced. But if Cadmus about this time brought letters into Greece, their learning can be of no great antiquity. How can the Greeks give account of ancient times, when they had not fo much as learned letters, when the world was come to its noontide?

Yea, long after this, even to the first Olympiad, the relations of the Greeks were accounted fabulous; they had not learned to speak truth when the world was above 3000 years old. Beside what testimonies I have above adduced to prove this *, I shall add that of Eusebius, who, from Julius Africanus, assures us +, There is nothing accurately written in history by the Greeks before the Olympiads; all things which are said to have happened before that time, are so confused, incoherent and inconsistent. Tho' Eusebius and Africanus thus speak, they had seen many Greek historians, which are now lost. If we look into the Greek historians among the Pagans, we shall find this further confirmed; and that even tho' the Olympiads be the best Epocha the Greeks afford us, yet they were not exactly calculated, nor to be depended upon. For Plutarch fays, when speaking of the time when Numa flourished, That 'tis difficult to determine it: nor can + we make any just calculation from the periods of the Olympick games, which the' lately published by one Elias Hippia, yet carry not sufficient force of argument and authority to render them authentick. The best of the Greek authors own, that it was impossible for them to write exactly of things of an old date. Thucydides, who flourished about the 88th Olympiad, that is, about 3526 years from the creation of the world, and is one of the most grave and impartial historians Greece can boast of, begins his story with that of the Peloponnesian war; because, says | he, ^{*} Supra pag. 77, 78. + Præp. Evang. Lib. 10. cap. 10. abinitio. ‡ Life of Numa, near the Beginning.

De bello Peloponnesiaco, Lib. 1. non longo ab initio.

the matter that precedes this, cannot now, through length of time, be accurately discovered, except by conjecture; Greece being not then famous either for war or other matters, and the country fo called was not well inhabited, but full of unquiet stations; frequent and continual removals, having no jettled commerce, nor form of a common-wealth. Plutarch, tho' a later author, having writin the time of the Emperor Trajan, yet is a historian of good credit; he dares go no further back than the time of Thefeus: for, fays he*, as historians, in their geographical descriptions of countries, crowd into the furthest parts of their maps those places that escape their knowledge, with some such remarks in the margin as thele; all beyond is nothing but dry and defart fands, or unpassable bogs, or Scythian cold, or a frozen jea; so in this work of mine, wherein I have compared the lives of the greatest men with one another, having run through that time whereunto probable reason could reach, and through which the truth of the history could pass, I may very well say of those that are farther off, all beyond is nothing but monstrous and tragical fictions; there the poets and there the inventers of fables dwell; nor is there any further to be expected deserving of credit, or that carries any appearance of truth. I know not but some part of the story of Theseus resembles the sable; but this learned inquisitive author plainly owns all beyond it to be monstrous and tragical fictions.

'Tis true, there are fome old Greek historians lost, whose names I need not repeat; the curious may find them in the learned Vossius, de Historicis Græcis: but even these lost histories do not much exceed the times of Cyrus and Cambyses, kings of Persia, as the same Vossius demonstrates. Of some of these books we have nothing but the bare names; as to others, by the titles of them that are preserved, we may conceive, had they been saved from the general shipwreck, we might have known something more of the origin of the cities in Greece, and the genealogies of their Gods; but no matter of sact, of general concern, before the Persian war. Their poets were

^{*} Life of Thefens, at the Beginning.

were the most ancient writers Greece can boast of; as Orpheus, Musaus, Arion, Amphion of Thebes, and after them, Homer, Hesiod, and others: but even all these shourdshed after the beginning of the Olympiads, and took a boundless liberty to vent sables and debauch the age. Clemens of Alexandria very justly remarks concerning them *, That under pretence of musick and poetry, they corrupted the lives of men, and by a kind of artificial magick drew them on to the practice of idolatry. So that upon the whole, all the antiquities of Greece upon record are many hundreds of years after Moses. What of them is before the Peloponnesian war, is sabulous, and none of them ever to be compared with any part of sacred Scripture-

As to the antiquities of the Romans, they acknowledge that Greece had every kind of learning before them; that there was nothing like a poem known among them till the year 410 after the building of Rome, when Livius published a fable †. The story of the Aberigenes, of Eneas and his descendants, they look upon as sictitious, as the proper subject for poets to divert their fancy with, who might contrive about these ancient times as they pleafed; they, as well as other nations, wanting divine revelation, knew nothing of the beginning of time, or origin of the world, as before proved ±. Hence even Cicero speaks of those who had died 100000 years before his time ||. If this learned Orator had understood any thing of the origin of the world, he would have known, that there had not been by far fo many years from the creation of man and the beginning of time. But the date the Romans infift upon, is from the building of Rome, which is commonly reckoned on the first year of the seventh Olympiad, that is, after the creation of the world 3198 , before the birth of Christ 750 years. Tho' this be no ancient record, when compared with those of the fews, yet even as to a considerable part of that time, viz. from the building of Rome to the expulfion of the kings, and erecting the confular state, which is ^{*} Protrepticon, nonlongè ab initio.

[†] Ciceronis Tusc. quæst. Lib. 1. §. 3.

‡ See Pag. 77, 78.

¶ Tusc. Quæst. Lib. 1. §. 9.

 Helvicus's Chronological Tables.

is reckoned 244 years, they had no certain documents. Plutarch owns this, when he says*, Tho' many noble families of Rome derive their original from Numa Pompilius, yet there is great diversity of historians concerning that time in which he reigned. A certain writer called Clodius, in a book of his of past times, avers, That the ancient registers of Rome were lost, when that city was sacked by the Gauls; and that those which are now extant, are counterfeited, to flatter and serve the humour of some great men, who are pleased to have their pedigree derived from some ancient and noble lineage, tho' in reality that family hath no relation to them. In short, the Romans had no documents for their history and chronology before the Cenfors Tables and the Fasti Consulares, which could not be, till these offices were erected, after the expulsion of the kings.

As to the antiquities of the Scytbians, or other barbarous nations, they had no learning, no monuments, no written history before the spreading of Christianity. We know nothing about them, except what the Greeks or Romans are pleased to tell us, who still extolled themfelves, and contemned others; and therefore 'tis difficult to believe them concerning their neighbours. But fince these nations had no learning nor history, till the time that religion and learning were propagated among them in the days of the Gospel, we are no further concerned with them in this enquiry.

What has been faid does demonstrate, how small light we can have from the heathen world for any ancient hiftory, till after the beginning of the Persian empire, that is, till the facred history of the Old Testament end, and that revelation to the Jewish Church was shut up by Malachi, the last of the prophets. A great part also of the heathen learning has been stolen or borrowed from the Jews, as we have before discovered +, and as has been more fully proved by others t, to whose labours I shall not add.

In

^{*} Life of Numa, at the Beginning.

[†] Above pag. 73, 74. ‡ Eusebius de Præpar. Evangel. lib. decimo per totum. Bochart, Gale's Court of the Gentiles. Grotius de veritate, &c.

112 The Authority of Moses confirmed,

In the last place, since the remote parts of the world have been made known to us by navigation and com-merce, fome travellers do report strange things concerning the antiquities of China. But the Chinese themselves confess their antiquities are in great part fabulous*; that their most ancient books were in hieroglyphicks; that their numbers in computation were mistaken, or months put for years. Of what antiquity foever their first writers were, there is little credit to be given to the books now remaining, fince that general destruction of all the ancient books by the Emperor Xi-Hoam-ti, who lived about 200 years before Christ. He commanded all the monuments of antiquity among them to be deftroyed, relating either to history or philosophy, especially the books of Confucius, and killed many of their learned men. Tho'the Chinese magnified their skill in aftronomy to the Europeans +, and described their emperors observatory, as most complete; yet upon a view thereof, it appeared very inconsiderable; the Instruments were found useless, and new ones placed in their room by the direction of Father Verbieft. They could not so much as make a calendar, their tables of eclipses were so uncorrect, as they could not foretel when that of the fun should happen, and their rules for calculating of them were all falie. From the whole, it appears that the facred antiquity of the holy Scriptures is only real, and true, and infallible; the pretences to it among other nations are fabulous and uncertain.

The divine authority of the books of Moses, and of the whole facred Scripture, is abundantly confirmed by what is already advanced; but fince 'tis usual to recommend the authority of ancient writers, by the testimony of others, who have lived as near as can be found, to their time; the books of Moses are not destitute of this collateral proof, as I before named it ||. The most ancient writers

|| See above pag. 87.

^{*} Martinii Hist. Sinica, lib. 1, 2. Præsatio P. Couplet. in Consucium. † Le Compte Memoirs, pag. 64, 71, 464. Jenkyns's Reasonableness of the Christian Religion, vol. 1. pag. 32. & seqq.

Chap. 1. by the Testimony of heathen Writers. 113 writers quote them with great veneration; from them they borrow their laws, and transcribe many matters of fact. This is not only done by Christians and Fews, on whose testimony I do not now insist, but even by Heathens. 'Tis not strange that feveral Greek and Latin authors have faid very little of a people, with whom they had no converse, who loved not them nor their religion; yet some of these have wrote concerning the Jews, as will appear by the fequel. This subject has been largely handled by others, I shall only glean a few passages that feem convincing, and conclude this point concerning the authority of the books of Moses. Josephus + and Eufebius || have left us the testimonies of many heathen authors to this purpose. The books they cite are most of them now lost, only these fragments they have quoted are preserved. Thus Numerius, a Pythagorean, tells tof Jannes and Jambres, magicians in Egypt, who were chofen to oppose Museus or Moses, his prayers being very powerful with God, and to deliver Egypt from those calamities he had inflicted. Josephus informs us of several heathen authors, who had writ concerning the flood of Noah , as Mnaseas, Nicolaus Damascenus, Manetho, Berosus, Hecatæus, Hellanicus, and Acustlaus. Eusebius produces a fragment of Abydenus, who fays ++, After these kings governed others, and then Sisithrus, to whomz Saturn signified there was a great deal of rain to be on the 15th of the month Desius, and commanded him to hide all letters at Heliopolis in Siparis. He, in obedience to these commands, sailed to Armenia, and found it true that was foretold: on the third day after the tempest was ceased, he sent out birds to try if they could find any earth dry; when they found nothing but sea, they returned to Sisithrus, who fent out others. At last he had his design, the birds returned loaded with slime. The Gods took Sisithrus from the world, and the ship arrived at Armenia, where the people took

⁺ In Antiquitatibus & contra Appionem. De Præp. Evang. lib. 9. per totum.

[‡] Apud Euseb. de præpar. lib. 9. cap. 7, 8.

^{} Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 8. + De Præp. Evang. lib. 9. cap. 12. Vol. I.

114 The Authority of Moses confirmed,

took chips of the wood, and carried it like amulets about their necks. Any body may here discover the story of Noah, tho' under another name. The same Abydenus writes of the tower of Babylon and the consustion of languages *. Berosus the Chaldean writes of Abraham. Hecatæus wrote a whole book concerning him, and Nicholaus Damascenus calls him king at Damajous+; that the whole country was famous for his fake; that a village is shewn where he lodged; that when a famine was in the land of Canaan, he went to Egypt, and taught the Egyptians arithmetick and astrology. Eupolemus, commended by A-lexander Polybistor, speaks also of him ||, and says, Abraham excelled all men in his time, for wisdom and piety; that when the Armenians had overcome the Phenicians, and made his nephew their prisoner, he with a retinue of his fervants subdued the conquerors—and being entertained at Argarize, Melchisedeck Priest of the most high God, who reigned there, fent him gifts. Melo cited by Alexander Polybistor, fays +, That Abraham had one son by his lawful wife, whom he called reaws Laughter; —that he was commanded of God to offer his son Isaac a burnt-offering; that he carried the boy with him to the top of a mountain, where he kindled a fire, and laid Haac upon it; but when he was going to kill him, an angel restrained him; a ram being presented for a sacrifice, he offered the same instead of bis son. Demetrius, cited by the same Polybistor , tells the whole story of Jacob's going to Charran in Mesopotamia, marrying Rachel and Leah, having twelve fons, and one daughter Dinab; of Joseph's being fold into Egypt, and most of what happened to him there. From Artapanus ++, we have a further account of fofeph; from Aristeas of Job |||; from Eupolemus and Artapanus of Moses \ddagger ; of the plagues in Egypt, of his bringing the people through the red-sea, when the Egyptians were drowned. But we are to credit the Word of God rather than Eupolemus, when he differs from it. The poet Ezekielus

Chap. 1. by the Testimony of Heathen Writers. 115 kielus* has a poetical narration of the same things, with some of the miracles done by Moses in the wilderness. I should transcribe almost the whole ninth book of Eusebius's Gospel-preparation, if I were to insert all the testimonies to this purpose. Josephus in his books against Appion, has other testimonies from profane authors confirming the Mosaick history, where he also vindicates the Jews from the reproaches cast upon them by the heathens. That the Athenians borrowed several laws from the Jews, and the Romans from the Greeks, has been proved by the learned Grotius +.

Many of the authors cited by Josephus, Eusebius, and fome others of the primitive fathers, to confirm the Mofaick history against the heathens, being now lost, in the general shipwreck of ancient books in the barbarous ages, to the great loss of the learned world; those fragments that are preferved should be the more valued by us. But I shall now offer a few testimonies from heathen authors, that to this day remain more entire. Diodorus Siculus fays ||, Among the Jews, Moses pretends that the God Jao was the author of his laws. By Jao here we may understand Jehovah, who is indeed the author of the laws Moses gave to the Jews. The same author, in his fortieth or last book, (of which there are only some Eclogæ or fragments remaining, for of forty books he wrote, only fifteen remain entire;) being there to discourse of the war with the Jews, begins with their origin. According to $ him, They were driven out of Egypt for some insectious disease, (which is a common calumny of the Heathens) and, fays he, the greatest part of them came into that country, now called Judea, at that time a defart. The leader of that colony was Moses, a wise and courageous man. He having taken possession of the country, built several towns, and Jerusalem the most famous of them all; and a temple, which is by them held in great veneration. He taught them the honour and ceremonies due to God; gave laws to their republick.

Bibl. Historic, lib. ult. pag. m. 1190.

^{*} De Præp. Evang. lib. 9. cap. 28, 29.

⁺ De jure belli cap. 1. §. 12. De veritate religionis lib. 1. §. 7. in notis pag. m. 15. || Bibl. Historic. lib. 1. cap. 94.

lick, and reduced them into order; he divided the multitude into twelve tribes, because he conceived this number most perfeet, and conformable to the months of the year. But he appointed no image nor statue of the Gods, because God has no human shape, but judged the heavens that surround the earth to be the only God, and to have all under their power. He appointed the rites for their facrifices, and rules for their manners, so as they might be different from other nations. He made choice of the helt men to govern that seofle, formed into a body. The priests were constantly to attend the temple. and perform the worship and sacrifices. To determine their important affairs, he gave them judges, and committed to them the care of the laws; and therefore they say the Jews never had a king. But the care and authority of governing this multitude was committed always to one who excelled among the priests in knowledge and virtue; bim they call the high-priest, and esteem him as the interpreter of the will and messages of God. He in their publick meetings gives commands; and the Jews are so obedient, that prostrate to the ground they adore him, when expounding the oracles of God. In the end of their laws it is said, Moses the messenger of God fays these things to the Jews. This, and some more to this purpose, has Diodorus, where every body who knows the facred history may understand how far he errs, and how false his narrative is. But he was not at pains to confult the Scriptures, which long before his time were translated by the seventy interpreters, but took his account from common tradition, which is always ready to deceive, or from authors not to be credited.

The like mistakes we may find in Justin, the abridger of Trogus Pompeius. I shall not trouble the reader with the whole, the book is in many hands; but the fum of his narrative concerning the Jews, may be rendred thus in English *: The origin of the Jews, says he, is from Damascus, a neble city in Syria, which town was so called from Damascus a king there, in bonour of whom the Syrians employed the sepulchre of his wife Ariathes for a temple, and counted ber a goddess. After Damascus, Azelus, Adores, Abraham and Israhel were kings; the happy progeny of ten sons made Israhel more famous than his ancesters; therefore the people were divided into ten kingdoms, and all called Jews, from Juda, who died after the division. He commanded his memory to be adored. His fortion did accrue to the rest. Joseph was the youngest of the brethren, they being jealous of his excellent genius, secretly sold him to merchants, who were strangers, by whom he was carried into Egypt; where, having learned magical Arts, by his great capacity he soon became dear to the king; for he understood prodigies, and was the first who did interpret dreams; neither was there any thing divine or human but what he understood. He foresaw the barrenness of the land many years before it happened. All Egypt would have ferished by famine, if the king, by his advice, had not ordered the corn to be laid up for many years; and his advice was esteemed, not as the word of a man, but as the oracle of God. Moses was his son, who inherited his knowledge, and was very beautiful; but the Egyptians perceiving them scabbed, by the advice of the oracle, that the infection might not spread, drove him with these sick people out of Egypt. He being leader to these fugitives, stole away the sacred things of Egypt, which when the Egyptians fought to recover by arms, they were obliged by reason of tempests to re-turn home. Therefore Moses having got into his native country of Damascus, possesses himself of Mount Sinai, where he with his people being weary with seven days fasting through the desarts of Arabia, he called the seventh day, according to the custom of his country, the Sabbath, and confecrated it for ever for a Fast; because that day put an end to their hunger and wandring, and because they remembred that for fear of the contagion they were driven from Egypt. Lest they should be hated by the natives of the land, for the same cause, they took care of commerce with strangers, which soon turned to a part of their Religion and Discipline. After Moses, his son Aruas, a priest in the Egyptian Religion, was created their King. Hence it became customary among the Jews to have the same person King and Priest, by whose Justice and Religion they increased to a great degree. Thus speaks Justin. In which narrative, as also in the following chapter, which I have not 13 translated.

Chap. 1. by the Testimony of Heathen Writers. 117

118 The Authority of Moses confirmed,

translated, any body may see abundance of errors, almost as many as words or sentences. Whatever truth is in it, must be from the Bible, which he or his author might see, and from which probably he had his relation, tho' he has blended it with sables. Trogus Pompeius, who wrote the history which Justin epitomized, was a retainer in the samily of the great Pompey, who conquered Judia. In the expedition of his master, without doubt he picked up the impersect relations of the Jews, or mixed the true history with the sabulous reports of some neighbouring Gentiles. The Scripture-History must then regulate the report. If any body were to look to the History of the Resormation, would they not believe Dr. Burnet, who has searched the records, and wrote with care, rather than Varillas, a French papist, who has picked up his narrative from popish authors, to throw dirt on the Reformation?

Cornelius Tacitus has also the story concerning the origin of the Jews, where are as many falshoods, and as injurious to that people, as in those of Diodorus Siculus and Justin; only some grains of truth may be drawn from their rubbish. Tacitus being to write the wars of Vespa-sian and Titus in Judea, says +, That in the reign of Isis, an over-grown multitude of Jews in Egypt, under the conduct of Hierosolymus and Judæus, did discharge them-selves into neighbouring countries.—That Moses, one of these banished people, did tell them, that they could expect no help either from gods or men, being forfaken of both, and therefore ought to trust him as a leader sent from beaven. They confented to him, and began their journey, not knowing whither they went; but nothing troubled them so much as want of water.—Moses, that he might secure this people for ever to bis interest, gave them new rites, contrary to those of all mortals. All things are profane to them, which we account sacred; and are permitted to them, which to us are forbidden. They kill the ram, in reproach of Jupiter Hammon, and sacrifice the bullock, which the Egyptians worship under the name of Apis. They abstain from + Hittor. lib. v. non longè ab inicio.

^{*} Nichols's Conference with a Theift, part 2. pag. 121.

Chap. 1. by the Testimony of Heathen Writers. 119

from swines flesh, because they were once troubled with the scab, to which that beast is obnoxious. On the seventh dry they think fit to be idle, because that day put an end to their labour; and, to flatter their laziness, they rest on the fevent's year. They circumcife their genitals, that they may be known by this to be different from other people. The Egyptians worship many beasts and compounded shapes, but the Jews know none but one spiritual Being, as their God, and count them profane who worship Images made of vile matter, in the likeness of men. That this great eternal God is unchangeable and immortal, and therefore they have no images in their cities, nor in their temples. That flattery or honour is not given to Kings or Emperors. —Their country abounds with palm-trees, very tall and beautiful. Their chief mountain is Lebanon; and, which is strange in fuch a hot country, it is dark, and covered with snow. From bence proceeds the river Jordan, which does not run into the sea, but passes through a lake or two, and finks into the third, which is a great lake or sea, but of a pestiferous smell; whose waves are not toffed with wind, nor do fish fwim in it, nor fowls frequent its waters, &c.

Plutarch discourses * of the Jews abstaining from fwines flesh, and gives odd reasons for it. He speaks of their Feaft of Tabernacles, where they perform Bacchanals, or Rites in honour of Bacchus. For, fays he, they use little trumpets to invocate their God, as the Argives in their Bacchanal Solemnities; then come others playing on barps and lutes, whom they call Levites; a name derived from Lyæus, a surname of Bacchus. Their Feast of Sabbaths, fays he, is not difagreeable to Bacchus.—They solemnize the Sabbaths with mutual feasting and drinking of wine, till they be intoxicated. Where he contradicts not only the truth, but also Tacitus+, who wrote before him, that the Rites of the Jews no way agree to Bacchus. Plutarch also says t, That the Jews High-priest, when he goes abroad, uses a mitre on his head; that he is cloathed with a vesture of Hag-skin, wrought richly with gold; arrayed also in a long robe down to his feet, with many little bells banging Sympofiac. Lib. 4. Quæft. 5. Tacitus loco modò citato.

[‡] Plutarch, ubi fupra.

banging down about the border and skirt of the robe, which jingle and ring as he goes.—That in their oblations they offer no honey.—These things are, without doubt, stolen from the books of Moses, tho' the heathens have adulterated what they speak about them with many fables and falshoods. Even Juvenal fays*, That fome (meaning the Jew:) fear the Sabbaths; they worship nothing but the Clouds and the God of Heaven; they no more eat swine's flesh than man's, from which their circumcised fathers abstained; that contemning the Roman laws, they learn the Jewish, and observe with religious fear whatever Moses delivered in his bidden book. I might cite Strabo +, and many other heathen authors, concerning Moses and the Tews: those who are curious, may see abundance of quotations to this purpose, in the books named at the foot of the page ‡. What I have already advanced is fufficient to prove what I afferted, in my entry on this argument, That the books of Moses were held in great veneration, even by ancient heathen writers. From them they borrow many laws, and transcribe many passages and matters of fact; and therefore Moses is not destitute of proof, from testimonies of his adversaries, who neither loved him nor his Religion; which confirms his authority.

The holy Scriptures being already proved to be a Revelation worthy of God, and given by him; and the authority of the books of Moses fo fully established, that there

* Juvenal. Satyr. 14. Ver. 96. & seq.

Metuentem Sabbata patrem,
Nil prater nubes, & cœli numen adorant:
Nec distare putant humanâ carne suillam,
Quâ pater abstinuit: mox & praputia ponunt:
Romanas autem soliti contemnere leges,
Judaicum ediscunt, & servant, ac metuunt jus,
Tradidit arcano quodcunque volumine Moses.

† Strabo, lib. 16. pag. 760, & feq. ‡ Eusebius de Præp. Evang. speciatim, lib. 9, 10. Clemens Alex. Protrepticon, Stromata. Augustin. de civitate Dei. Cyrillus contra Julianum. Josephus contra Appionem. Huetii Demon. Evangelica, speciatim, Prop. 4. cap. 2. pag. m. 51 ad 68. Grotius de veritate, &c. lib. 1. in notis ad §. 15—18. à pag. 23 ad 66. fameson's Spicilegia, cap. 8, 9. à pag. 153 ad 212. Chap. 1. other Books of the Old Testament. 121 there can be no cheat nor falshood in them; the divine authority of all the other books of the Old Testament may be thus further demonstrated. First, The doctrine is the very same with what is contained in the books of Moses, both as to the Rule and Sanction of the moral Law, and also as to the Ordinances of Worship; tending to engage that people, and others after them, to the careful and constant observance of the law, for promoting the honour of God, the Creator of heaven and earth, and good of Mankind. The truth whereof is obvious to any, who, with understanding, reads the other books of the Old Testament, and compares them with the books of Moles; the doctrinal part of them being only an explication of the laws of Moses, and of the prophecies uttered by him, with exhortations and promises to obedience, and denunciations of wrath, to fright from the breach of the divine law. Secondly, the history of the miracles and matters of fact appears to be true, because these books have been received as the word of God, containing true matter of fact, doctrine and history, and have been owned as the Word of God by the Fews; which could not have been, had they been a forgery and falshood. The same reasons, which prove that the books of Moses could not have been received by them, had they been forged, have more force in this case, in regard they had the books of Moses, whereby to try all new Revelations pretending to have been from God. They had also an uninterrupted succession of High-priefts, who could give an infallible decision by Urim and Thummim in all such matters; and a succession of prophets extraordinarily raifed up, at least one or more in every age, from Moses to Malachi; of which number were all the writers of the other books of the Old Testament. Many of them wrought fignal miracles in the view of the whole nation, princes and people; as Samuel, Elijah, Elisha, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, &c. Also there are recorded many remarkable Acts of God's wonderful mercies to that people, when obedient; and terrible judgments upon them, when difobedient. All which do declare how impossible it was for for any person to have forged all, or any of these books, and imposed them on that people, who were so unwilling to obey the commandments of God revealed to them. For by these books, the Jews unthankfulness to God, and their rebellion against him, with the judgments he inflicted upon them, their kings and priefts, for the fame, are revealed to the view of all men. evidence then of divine authority perfuaded the Yews to receive them, as being fent of God to reprove them for their fin, and to encourage them to their duty; and the same may perfuade all men to the end of the world, that these books came from God, to advance these noble purposes. Thirdly, The arguments which I have before advanced, to prove that the Scriptures are a Revelation given by God, for the good of his church*, do all hold concerning those books after Moses, from the beginning of Joshua to the end of Malachi. There true Doctrine shines. There are the manifestations of Divine Power, by working miracles. There are the most certain and infallible hiftory and chronology of the Church of God, and the world, for many ages. There the harmony of inspired writers, tho' in different ages and places, do declare, that the Scriptures are all given by the fame Spirit of God. There are prophecies, proceeding from infinite knowledge and wildom, exactly accomplished. Where can we find fuch predictions, as in Isaiab, Jeremiab, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the rest of the prophets, where the event does exactly answer what is foretold? Here the experience of David in the Pfalms, of Job in his book, do exactly correspond with these of the people of God in all ages, because God, who indited this word, knew infallibly what would be the case of his people to the end of the world. Here the brightest discoveries of the vanity of the world in the book of Ecclefiastes, and the wifest precepts to conduct human life in the book of Proverbs, beyond what any of the heathen moralists could pretend to. They could never enforce their precepts with fuch an encouraging profest of rewards, nor with fuch a terrible view of punish-punishments, as these sacred books plainly discover. All these things do loudly proclaim the divine authority of these books; that there is no cheat in them, but that they are fent of God to be a rule to his Church in all

3

^{*} See pag. 65 to 86.

Chap. 1. other Books of the Old Testament. 123

Fourthly, The civil history of the world confirms the certainty of the matters of fact related in these books of the Old Testament. Had the heathens any accurate history of these times, we should be at no loss to adduce testimonies to prove this; but it has already been made evident, that the most ancient historians of the Gentiles that now remain, did not begin to write, till some time after the commencement of the Persian empire, that is, till the canon of the Old Testament was closed by Malachi, the last of the prophets. The heathers also hated the Jews, and had little or no commerce with them. We can therefore expect but very imperfect hints of their affairs from them; yet I shall adduce a few, such as offer. Eusebius cites the book of Eupolemus, concerning the prophecy of Elias , saying, Moses did the office of a prophet forty years; to him succeeded Jesus the Son of Naue, who executed that office thirty years, and lived till he was a hundred and ten; by him the tabernacle was fixed in Shiloh. After him was Samuel the prophet; and after him Saul was made king by the command of God: he died in the twenty first year of his reign. To him succeeded David bis son, who overcame the Syrians at Euphrates, and the city Comagene, with the Syrians and Phenicians in Gileadene. He also fought against the Idumeans, Ammonites, Moabites, Itureans, Nabatheans, and Nabdeans; also against Suron king of Tyre, and obliged all of them, in time to come, to pay tribute to the Jews: But he made a covenant with Vaphres king of Egypt. When he earnefily desired to build a temple to God, and asked where the altar should be erected; suddenly an angel told him, it must be above Jerusalem. But he was prohibited to build this temple, because he was a bloody man, who had spent several years in wars. The angel's name was Dianathan, by whom David was ordered to leave the care of building the temple to his son. He prepared gold, silver, brass, stones, cypress, and cedar-wood. David also caused ships to be built at Achan, a city in Arabia, and sent men skilled in metals to Urphe, an island in the red-sea, abounding with gold-mines, who brought thence much gold into Judea. David having reigned forty years, left the kingdom to his son Solomon, of twelve years of age, before Heli the high-priest and twelve princes of the people, with the gold, filver, stones, cypress, and cedar-wood. Solomon assumed the government after his father's death, and sent a letter to Vaphres, king of Egypt, for work-men to build the temple. The form of the letter, with Vaphres's favourable answer, Solomon's letter to Suron king of Tyre, Sidon, and Phenicia, Suron's (called in Scripture Hiram's) answer, with an account of the structure of the temple, and the rest of Solomon's buildings and actings, not unlike to what is in the bible, we have from Eupolemus, preferved by Eusebius. The fame Eutolemus, and from him Polyhistor, tells us +, That in the reign of Joakim lived Jeremiah the prophet, who finding the Jews offering sacrifice to a golden idol of Baal, told them of a dreadful calamity that would come upon them. And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, as foretold by Jeremiah the prophet, came against Judea, destroyed the whole country, took the city Jerusalem, made the King Joakim prisoner, seized all the gold, silver and brass which was in the temple, and sent it to Babylon, except the ark and tables in it, which remained under the custody of Jeremiah. In the fame book of Eusebius + we have a large account from Berofus and Abydenus of Nebuchad. nezzar, and his fucceffors, kings of Babylon.

Josephus from Dius and Menander, who translated the Tyrian annals from the Phenician into the Greek tongue, gives an account of the friendly correspondence by letters || betwixt Hiram king of Tyre, the son of Abibalus, and Solomon, and how the letter answered the doubts, problems and questions of the former, explaining them to his satisfaction, according to his knowledge, which was extraordinary. Josephus also from the same Menander,

^{*} De præp. Evang. Lib. 9. cap. 31, 32, 33, 34t Cap. 40, 41. || Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 23

^{+ 1}bid.cap. 39.

Chap. 1. other Books of the Old Testament. 125

der, has a short history and chronology of several of the kings of Tyre*, where sacred and profane history kiss one another +. Particularly it appears that the Phenician Dido, who built Carthage in Afric, with whom, Virgil fays, Eneas conversed after he fled from Troy, lived after the time of Solomon; which strengthens the opinion we formerly advanced, concerning the time of the wars of Troy. The fame Josephus frequently brings gentile writers into the field, confenting to the history and antiquities of the Jews. I shall but mention one other passage of this kind: while he writes of the famine in the time of Abab king of Israel, he says ‡, this want of rain is mentioned also by Menander, upon the affairs of Ithobaal king of the Tyrians, That in his reign there was a great want of rain, even from the month Hyperbetæus to the same month in the following year, for which he appointed prayers, and there followed great thunder. This is the great drought recorded 1 Kings Chap. xvii. Ithobaal might supplicate his Gods, but the judgment was removed by the God of Jacob. Elijah prayed, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth fruit; James v. 18.

The testimonies I have hitherto adduced to confirm the history of the Old Testament, are from authors that are lost, only some fragments of them are preserved by the care of Josephus and Eusebius, to whom posterity are much obliged. I shall now offer some testimonies from authors that are transmitted to us more entire. Strabo that ancient geographer, who flourished in the Augustan age, says ||, The successors of Moses, who to this time ob-ferve his laws, are just men and truly religious, reverencing God, and loving justice. Procosius, writing of the war of the Vanda's in Afric, speaks of an inscription found in that country upon an ancient monument, signifying , we are those who have fled from the face of that robber, Jesus the son of Naue. The land of Canaan was not then a barren desart, as Tacitus alledges, nor was it obtained

^{*} Contra Appionem, lib. 1.
† Vide Jameion's Spicilegia, cap. 11. pag. 217. & feqq.
‡ Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 7. || Geograph. lib. 16.
 De bello Vandalico, lib. 2. cap. 10. Huris εσμέν οι φευγέντες ἀπο προσώπε Ιησέ τε λης ε, ήε Ναυή.

without war by the Jews; nay, it was conquered by irrelistible force, under the conduct of Joshua the son of Nuzz many of the former inhabitants being killed or expelled. Even Julian, the emperor commonly called the apostate, writing against the Christians, says *, You Soun to offer sacrifices at the altar, because fire does not defeend from heaven to confume the victims, as in Moses's time; but that happened only once in his days, and long after in those of Elias the Tisbite. Here Julian is not so great an insidel, as our modern Deists; he acknowledges the truth of these miracles, which they deny.

Herodote, the most ancient historian among the Gentiles that's extant, has feveral passages that touch the facred hiftory; but they are so difguised and mixed with fables he received from the Egyptian priests, that one would scarce know them. To notice a few of them, we may observe, that 'tis the opinion of Josephus +, that Sefostris, the Egyptian of whom Herodote tells strange stories ‡, is the same with Shifbak, who in the fifth year of Rehoboam came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, of the king's house, and all the shields of gold which Solomon had made ||. The fame is lately maintained by our learned country-man (while he lived, my good friend) Mr. Jameson, against Perizonius , and I see nothing to contradict it. Sesostris overcame the Syrians in Palestine, by which defignation the Jews are frequently meant among gentile writers. Herodole also from an account, disguised by the Egyptian priests, has the story of Hezekiah's being delivered from the Affyrian, Senacherib ++. He indeed makes a fabulous application of it, to the city Pelusium, and to Sethon the Egyptian king, instead of Hezekiah, by whose piety, fays he, it was obtained, that while the king of Affyria laid siege to Pelusium, a great number of rats were miraculously sent into his army, who in one night did eat all their shield-straps, quivers and how-strings; so as on their rising next morning, finding themselves without arms

^{*} Apud Cyrillum contra Julianum, lib. 10. + Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 4. † Lib. 2. cap. 102——106. | 1 Kings xiv. 25, 26.  Spicilegia antiq. cap. 13, 14. + Isa. xxxvii. 36—38. 2 Kings xix.

Chap. 1. other Books of the Old Testament. 127

for carrying on the war, they were forced to raise the siege, and be gone +. 'Tis particularly to be remarked, that Herodote calls the king of Affyria, to whom this happened, by the same name of Sancherib or Senacherib, as the facred Scriptures do, and the time in both do well' agree; which shews it is the same fact that is related by both, even tho' the former has disguised the relation, which may be eafily accounted for, as Dr. Prideaux observes +, when we consider that it comes to us thro the hands of fuch as had the greatest aversion both to the nation and religion of the Jews, and therefore would tell nothing in such a manner, as might give any reputation to either. The same Herodote informs us ||, That Necos king of Egypt fought with the Syrians at Magdollo, and gained the victory, and after the battle feized the great city Cadytis. This is the same story we have in sacred Scripture , tho' the names be a little changed. Mr. Jameson ++ maintains against Perizonius, that the city Cadytis is Jerusalem. I see no reason to doubt of it. 'Tis certain, that Pharaoh-Necho having wounded the good king Josiah in battle at Megiddo, of which wounds he died, soon after the victory put Jehoahaz in bonds at Riblah, that he might not reign at Jerusalem, and put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of filver, and a talent of gold, and made Eliakim king in the room of his father Josiah, changing his name to Jehoiakim. Now all this might be done at Ferusalem, after it was seized by Pharaob-Necho, and the name Cadytis being near a-kin to Kadesh, boly, is very applicable to that holy city. Herodotus also speaks of Apries king of Egypt ##, who is the fame man, whom the prophet Jeremiah calls Pharaoh-Hophrah || ||. The account Herodote  and Xenophon +++ both give, of taking Babylon by Cyrus, does exactly agree with that of the holy Scripture, as we may fee illustrated by the learned Dr. Prideaux ###.

But

[†] Herodote lib. 2. cap. 141. pag. m. 144. ‡ Connection of Hilt. Part 1. pag. m. 25. || Lib. 2. cap. 159.  2. Kings xxiii. 29—35. †† Spicilegia cap. 2. pag. 25. ‡‡ Lib. 2. cap. 161. || || Jerem. xiv. 30.  In Clio, i.e. lib. 1. cap. 191. †† † Cyropædia lib. 7. ‡‡‡ Connection, Book 2.

But'tis not my design to insist upon all particulars of this kind. Divine Providence has so ordered, that after the beginning of the Persian monarchy, we have some sootsteps in heathen authors, to confirm the accomplishment of Scripture-prophecies and threatnings concerning the Church, and other nations. Of which several writers, and particularly Dr. Prideaux has made good improvement, in his book entitled, The Old and New Testament connected, in the history of the Jews and neighbouring nations; as any body, who reads it with reslection, may perceive. What I have already advanced, does prove, that the civil history of the world confirms the certainty of matters of fact related in the books of the Old Testament.

I proceed now to the books of the New Testament. Having already demonstrated, that the whole facred Scripture is a revelation worthy of God, and inspired by his Holy Spirit, I shall only add a few reasons to confirm the authority of the New Testament. First, that the doctrine is of the same nature with the doctrine of Moses and the prophets, and naturally tends to promote the same end. Jesus Christ our blessed Redeemer did press the obfervance of the moral law delivered by Moses, and did vindicate the same from the salie glosses of corrupt teachers, in his excellent fermon on the mount*, and in all his fermons. He particularly declares, that he came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil them +. All the Apostles exactly follow their master's precept and example, as is evident by their writings. 'Tis true, the ordinances of divine worship are changed, as to their outward rites and ceremonies: yet the substantial part of worship is the same in the Old and New Testament; and the worship in the New, does in a more clear and fimple manner profecute the ends of the Old Testament rites. Both these rites of worship were convenient and necessary in their several seasons; even that in the Old Testament, to make way for the worship of the New, by giving the world a right notion of the nature of facrifices, as a substitution of one that was innocent to suffer in the room of the guilty. But the Old-Testament worship being appointed by Godhimself, by a revelation confirmed by so many miracles and prophecies, two things were necessary to the change thereof. 1st, That the change should have been foretold in the Old Testament. 2dly, That the person who made the change, should prove the truth of his mission from God by miracles and prophecies, at least equal to those whereby the former was established.

^{*} Matth. v, vi, vii.

As to the first of these, that the rites of the Old-Te-stament worship were to be changed, was plainly fore-told in the Old Testament itself; for Moses declared *, The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet, from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, to him shall ye hearken.——And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. Now that whereby Moses is distinguished from all the prophets, is his giving a new revelation of the law of God, and appointing new ordinances of religious worship, and acting the part of a mediator between God and his people. Wherefore the prophet, here foretold, must publish the law a-new, and give new institutions of religious wor-ship, and be a mediator between God and his people. If Christ had not done these things, any other of the prophets had been as like unto Moses as he; yea, he would have been more like to the other prophets than to Moses. But he did a-new publish and explain the law; and gave new ordinances of religious worship, and in a fingular manner did act the part of a Mediator; therefore he is a prophet like unto Moses. From all which we fee, that the ordinances of Moses gave the people ground to expect a change of the religious worship; which is yet more clearly discovered by the prophets, who lived nearer the time of the Messiah: as, when our Lord substitutes himself in the room of these legal offerings, Sacrifice ^{*} Deut.xviii.15,19. Vol. I.

Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire.—Then said I Le, I come *. He is a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedeck +. There being a change of the priesthood, not of the tribe of Levi, but of the tribe of Judab, of necessity there must be a change of the law, fince fo many of the ceremonial laws relate to the priesthood. Daniel expresly says $\days$, The Meshab shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease. Our Lord's fatisfaction was quite of another nature from all the legal offerings, He made his foul an offering for fin ||. He having exercifed his publick ministry for three years and a half, offered up himself to death in the midst of that septenary of years, and thereby fulfilled the defign of all the Mofaical facrifices; from which time they were of no more use to the people of God. All this is confirmed by the prophet Feremiah, They shall say no more, the ark of the covenant of the Lord: neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall that be done any more . Christ being come, as the fubstance of that, of which the ark and all the rites were a shadow, he being now our propitiatory and mercy-seat, there shall be no missing of the ark, nor any repair to it, as a divine oracle. The days come, faith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Ifrael; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt ++. The prophet Malachi fays, from therifing of the sun, even to the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great emong the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts ##. When he casts off ceremonial services, and carnal ordinances, he will fet up spiritual and heavenly in the room of them, and all nations from East to West shall fubmit to them. All these prophecies are a sufficient proof, that God declared in the Old Testament he defigned a new way of religious worship should be instituted by the Messiah under the Gospel.

Secondly,

^{*} Pfal.xl. 6, 7. + Pfal. cx. 4. + Daniel. ix. 27. || Ifaiah liii. 10.  Jeremiah iii. 10. ++ Jerem. xxxi. 31, 32., ++ Malachi i. 11.

had

Secondly, Since our Lord Jefus did prove his commission by testimonies of divine power and knowledge, equal to those given by Moses; his doctrine must be received as the Word of God. Now, the miracles recorded in the New Testament, as done by Christ, are for weight and number, equal to those of Moses and all the succeeding prophets, and were wrought as publickly before the world; all that would, even his greatest enemies, having access to see them. The greatest adversaries to Christianity, who lived near these times, even Celsus and Julian, were never fo impudent as to deny the truth of any of them.

Thirdly, Our Redeemer did one miracle far exceeding any done by Moses or any prophet, namely, by raising himself from the dead. This was foretold in the Old Testament, Thou wilt not leave my foul in hell*, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption +. And more plainly by Christ himself, when he says, I lay down my life: I have power to lay it down, and power to take it again \(\pm$\). Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it again.———But he spake of the temple of his body, When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembred that he said unto them, and believed the Scriptures, and the words which Jefus had said ||. He yields himself to the death, and suffers his enemies to kill him in the most publick, cruel and ignominious manner; and when he had been in the grave till the third day, he rifes again according to the Scripture, and to his own promife.

Our Lord's Refurrection is an illustrious proof of the whole of the Christian Religion; that he is fent of God to seek and to save that which was lost ; that the father did really give him that testimony, this is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him ++; that he has fanctified and fent him into the world ##; that he is the fon of God; that him bath God the father fealed ||||, &c. To be fure, the glorious God would never have given him fuch credentials, as a refurrection from the dead,

^{*} Or, in the Grave, as the Word Sheolalso signifies.

^{*} Or, in the Grave, as the word of the street of the compare Psalm xvi. 10. with Acts ii. 31. and xiii. 35.

 Luke xix. 10.

^{||} John ii. 19, 21, 22. ||‡ John x. 36. ++ Matth.xvii. 5 John vi. 27.

had he been a deceiver. The certainty of his refurrection is as well attested as any truth in the world. He was seen of above five bundred brethren at once*. Tho an imposture might be concealed among a few, yet 'tis next to impossible it should be undiscovered by so great a number; that all their hearts and tongues should fo keep time, and never clash with one another. The Apostles, who preached this doctrine, testified of things confistent with their personal knowledge; This Jesus God has raised, whereof we are witnesses +. They did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead; they conversed with him for forty days; they received orders and instructions from him ‡. He upbraided them for their unbelief ||. When they delivered their testimony, they called on his name, begged his assistance, and wrought great miracles and wonderful cures. All this they did in the most publick manner, when Jerusalem was crowded with strangers at the solemn feasts; they made no fecret, yea, they boafted of it . The Sanbedrim of the Jews could not deny nor refute the proof, but were flirred with wrath to persecute the Apostles, who talked of it in the place where it was done, and immediately after the refurrection. The men who did fo, were of fuch probity and virtue, as their adversaries never durst call the same in question. They were not educated in courts, nor accustomed to politicks and arts of deceiving. They could have no fecular interest in view, in preaching this doctrine to the world, that our Lord was crucified to fatisfy the justice of God for our fins, that we are to die to sin, and live unto righteousness; to deny ourselves, and take up our cross and follow him. The men they preached to, were either Jews or Gentiles, educated under many prejudices to the Christian Religion; the Gentiles fond of their idols, which the Gospel overturned; and the Jews possessed with an imagination, that the Messiah was to be a temporal prince, to deliver them from their present oppression. Not finding this in our Redeemer, they would have consuted the truth of his refurrection.

^{* 1} Cor. xv 6. + Acts x. 40, 41. + Matth. xxviii. 19, 20. * Luke xxiv. 25. * Acts v. 30——33.

refurrection, had it not been so bright as they durst never oppose it. How severe are the laws of our holy religion against all deceit, lying, forgery and false testimony *. Had the Apostles been men of degenerate principles, they would never have given such rules as we have in the Gofpel. But they heartily believed what they taught, as appears by their chearful fuffering on that score. Neither were they foolish stupid men, but understood very well what they taught. Their discourses are grave and well composed, full of life and persuasive eloquence; so that our Lord's refurrection has all the evidence a subject of this kind is capable of. Add to all this, that it was typified and prophefied of in the Old Testament +. 'Tis confirmed by the testimony of angels ‡, and many wonderful works ||. There was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord came, and rolled back the stone from the door of the sepulchre; the keepers did shake, and became as dead men: Yea, the foldiers, those adversaries the watch, came into the city and shewed to the chief priests the things that were done. Since then the truth of our Lord's divine mission to save sinners, and of the whole Christian Religion, is so well attested by so glorious a resurrection from the dead, his laws do oblige mankind, his promises and threatnings most certainly shall be fulfilled. Infidels and unbelievers are the greatest fools and madmen, who lose happiness here and hereafter, and incur endless misery for worse than nothing; and Christians who do believe his promifes, and obey his commands, are the only wife men in the world.

Fourthly, The truth of the books of the New Testament, and of the matters there contained, is established on the same reasons, by which we have demonstrated the books of Moses to be true and genuine, incapable of being forged; for these books being writ at, or very near the time wherein these remarkable transactions actions happened, it was impossible they should have been received as true by the people of that place and age wherein they were done and wrote, had not their truth been past contradiction; because every body must have perceived the cheat, especially the rulers of the Jews, and body of the nation, who were the most deadly enemies to Christ and his Apostles, who persecuted him and them to the death; and yet they never attempted to dispute one matter of fact contained in them. There is no need of making any diffinction among the books of the New Testament, as we did in the Old, nor of proving the truth of those who wrote in distinct periods of time; they being all writ in the space of fifty years, in the very time and age wherein the wonderful works there related were done, and they all teach and explain the same doctrine of Christ. Moreover, the preaching of the doctrine, receiving the facraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, observing the chrritian fabbath on the first day of the week, churchofficers being fet apart for performing these religious duties, and commemorating the fufferings, death, and refurrection of our Redeemer, together with the fudden fpreading of the Gospel through the greatest part of the Roman empire, in Europe, Afia, and Afric, (by which means vast numbers of these books were spread abroad) made it impossible for any to forge or impose them on the world in fucceeding ages. For in whatever intermediate age we can suppose them to have been forged, the cheat must have been discovered; because neither the books, nor the ftory of these wonderful works, should ever have been heard of in any part of the world before, fince in this case they had not been formerly invented. Neither can it be supposed that these ordinances were contrived, either for no reason at all, or upon some other account than the death and refurrection of Christ; for the most folemn observances do expresly mention his death, as Baptism and the Lord's Supper. And all the officers in the christian church affirm they are his officers, and act in his name and authority; and pretend to know nothing, and teach nothing among their people, but Christ and him crucified, I Cor. ii. 2. and what relates thereto.

* Ephef.iv. 25. Rev. xxi. 8. and xxii. 15.

⁺ Pfalm xvi. 10. Hosea vi. 2. Matth. xii. 40. # Matth. xxviii. 5,6.

Matth.xxviii.2, 4, 11. Mark xvi.4. Luke xxiv.2. John xx. 1.  See this argument more fully handled by Humphrey Ditton on the Resurrection.

thereto. And we are to have a continual succession of church-guides to the end of the world, teaching the same doctrine according to Christ's promise, Matth. xxviii. 19, 20. and xvi. 18. 'Tis evident to every thinking person, that no man, nor company of men, how cunning soever, could at this day forge books, containing matters of fact, either more or less memorable than those contained in the New Testament, yet different from what is there recorded, and persuade Christians to receive and believe them, as the reasons of their religious observances. So neither could any do it in preceding ages, for the reasons already alledged.

Add to all this, that the great numbers of people who received this doctrine through the Christian Church, the multitude of copies of those facred books that were difperfed, the wonderful constancy of Christians in adhering to the truth, and their care to preferve the books containing the rules thereof, amidst the most cruel persecutions that the wit, malice, or cruelty of men could invent or inflict, make it utterly impossible for any to forge these books, and impose them on the christian world; there being fo many standing monuments whereby the cheat might be discovered: The whole train of ecclesiastic historians, from the days of Christ to the present time, giving an account of the propagation, continuance and fuccession of that Religion our Lord did institute. Tho' many have attempted to forge books in the name of Christ and his Apostles, they have always been discovered to be impostors. The very institutions that Mabomet prescribed, and committed to writing in his time, with the many copies that were in his days, or foon after spread, of his Alcoran, make it impossible for any to forge a new book in his name, and impose it upon his followers, as institutions given by him; yea, prove the Alcoran now received by the Mahometans, to be the same book that was delivered by Mahomet. But I have already discoursed of this imposture: my design now is to confirm the Truth of the Christian Religion. In order to this end,

In the fifth place, to filence the clamour and blafphemies of deifts and antifcripturifts, let it be confidered, that there is not one character nor property of an impofture in the Gospel of Jesus Christ; nay, every thing in it bears the marks of the true religion God has fent to fave man from mifery. First, every imposture must have for its end some carnal interest. Mahomet's aim in his imposture was his ambition and his lust; to have sovereignty over his country, to fatisfy his ambition, and have as many women as he pleafed, to fatiate his luft. To gain himself a party for compassing this, was the grand defign of that new religion he invented, and the whole end of his imposing it upon those he deluded thereinto. Whoever pursues the like method, must certainly have some fuch end; it being incredible that any one should take upon him the trouble, fatigue, and danger of cheating for cheating's fake. But we challenge all the adversaries of that holy religion we profess, to find out any thing like this in the Gospel of Jesus Christ; any thing that savours of worldly interest, either in the first Founder of our faith, or in any of his Apostles, who were the first propagators of it. Our Lord freely preached against whatever he found blameable in the people: He spared not their most beloved errors, nor framed his doctrines to indulge them in any one wicked practice, how predominant foever amongst them. He was so far from courting those in greatest esteem with them, that he was most sharp and bitter against them: I mean the Scribes and Pharifees; for on all occasions he detected their hypocrisies, laid open their wicked practices, and condemned their iniquity. When our Lord took on him to be the promifed Messiah, he did it not, according to the notions of the Jews, to be a fecular prince, to deliver them from their enemies, and to restore the kingdom of David at Jerusalem, and there reign in great glory and splendor, over the whole house of Ifrael; but he came in a character altogether contrary to this. He told them, His kingdom was not of this world; not temporal, but spiritual. He was a man of serrows and acquainted with grief. Instead of conquests over enemies, extent of power, and a slourishing state of prosperity, which they dream'd of, he preached to them mortification, repentance and felf-denial; and his Apostles followed his example. 2 dly, An imposture must always have wicked men for the authors of it: For thus to impose upon mankind is the worst of cheats; to paum a false religion on them, is the highest injustice, most dishonouring to God, and ruining to man. 'Tis such a con-fummate piece of iniquity, that 'tis impossible any one can arrive thereto, without having first corrupted himself in a great degree in all things else. That Mahomet was fuch an one, we have formerly feen in the hiftory of his life *: But who ever charged Christ or his Apostles with any thing like this? Not Celsus, nor Porphyry, nor Julian, or any other of the Heathens or Jews, the bitterest enemies to Christianity; which they would not spare to have done, could they have found fuch an accusation. It cannot be faid, that they could not have that knowledge of their lives and actions, as was sufficient to discern their faults and miscarriages. Tho Mahomet acted his imposture in a remote part of Arabia, among a people who by vast desarts were in a manner cut off from converse with the rest of mankind, and had none to be witnesses, but those who embraced his forgery; yet this could not conceal his faults and wickednesses. But Christianity had not its birth in fuch an obscure hole; nor did our Lord and his Apostles make their appearance among such illiterate Barbarians, but in one of the most open stages of the world, at Jerusalem and in Judea; not in that age, when that nation was separate from others, but when they had mingled with other nations, and were forced to admit other nations to mingle with them, by being made a province of the Roman empire, which brought foldiers and merchants of other countries, and any who pleafed to refide among them. To be fure, in fuch a place, could they have found any thing to cast a blot on the religion our Lord and his Apostles taught, we should have enough of it; yet their bitterest enemies, for several centuries, could not find any thing of this nature, as we shall hear in the following history. 3dly, If Christ or his Apostles

^{*} See pag. 54. to pag. 62.

Apostles had been wicked persons, thus to impose upon us a false religion, their wickedness and the interest they drove at, must have appeared in the contexture of the Religion itself: and the books in which 'tis contained, would have proved this against them, as the Alcoran doth against Mahomet; every chapter of which almost yields manifest proofs of the wicked affections of the man, breathing rapine, bloodshed, and lust, and the self-interest he drove at for gratifying of them. But we challenge all the enemies of our faith, to use their utmost skill to make the least discovery of these, or any thing like them in the books of the New Testament. They have already gone through the scrutiny of many ages, and all manner of adverfaries, and none have been able to tax them herewith. But on the contrary, their whole defign is to withdraw our hearts from the present world, and fix them on that which is to come: and therefore do not inculcate fighting, bloodshed, and conquest, as the Alcoran; but enjoin mortification, repentance, and felf-denial, to abstain from all evil in thought, word, and action; to abandon the pomp and vanity of this world; to live foberly, righ. teoully, and holily; to endure tribulations, afflictions, and perfecutions, which shall attend the disciples of Christ; that we may be happy in the enjoyment of God, as our portion here, and for ever glorious and bleffed hereafter.

4thly, The next mark of an imposture, is, that it must unavoidably contain in itself several palpable salsities, whereby may be made appear the salshood of all the rest: For whoever invents a lye, can never do it so cunningly and knowingly, but still there must be some slaw or other lest in it, which will expose it to a discovery. By this we distinguish supposititious authors from those which are genuine, and sabulous writers from true historians. If we examine the Alcoran of Mahomet by this method, nothing can be more plainly convicted of salshood, than that must be by it: for tho' in that book he allows both the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority; yet in a multitude of instances he differs from both, even in matters of sact and history, which if once true, must evermore be the same: as, by a very gross blunder, Alc. Chap. 3. he makes the Virgin Mary, the mother of our Saviour, to be the same with Miriam, the sister of Moses: besides many other immoralities in that book, to give way for his luft, as has been before observed. But there is nothing in the New Testament of that nature: the facts were done in the open view of the world, and never contradicted by the greatest enemies of our religion; and the event justifies the truth of all the prophecies, and shews that the author of them was in the secrets of the Almighty.

· Lastly, An imposture can never be established without force and violence; for the search of the inquisitive would still find it out. To prevent this, Mahomet for-bad all disputes about his Religion, and persecuted with war all that would not fubmit thereto. But our Redeemer commands us to fearch the Scriptures, to examine and try ourselves: neither did he nor his Apostles make use of any force, to establish the Religion they taught. Yea, all the force and powers of the world, for at least three centuries, were employed against it. Yet, in spite of all the world, it prevailed over the world, by the dint of its own truth only *. Therefore upon the whole, Christianity has nothing of imposture in it, but every thing does demonstrate, that 'tis the only Religion fent of God for our Salvation.

In the fixth place, tho' the evidence already alledged be fufficient, yet we shall add, that the history of the New Testament is confirmed by the testimony of adverfaries, Jews and Heathens, writers of credit, who lived in the same age wherein these things were done, or near to it. And first of all, by the testimony of Josephus the Jew: he says †, At this time lived Jesus, a wise man, if we may call bim a man, for he did wonderful works, and was a teacher of men, who willingly received the truth, and had many, both of Jews and Gentiles, his followers. This was Christ, who, being accused by the princes of our nation, ^{*} See this Argument more fully handled in Dr. Prideaux's Letter to the Deists.

⁺ Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 4. Tiveral d'è varà Têten & ngóvon Inogs orçès æνήρ, &c.

nation, was crucified by Pilate. Nevertheless, they who from the first loved him, did not cease to do so; for he appeared to them again alive on the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold this and many other things concerning him; and to this time the tribe of Christians, named from bim, do continue. Tho' fome controvert this place, as not genuine, I fee no reason to question it, since 'tis to be found in all the copies of Josephus, whether print or manuscript. 'Tis quoted by the ancient ecclesiastick writers of best credit, as Eusebius*, Jerom +, Isidorus Pelusiota +, Sozomen ||, Georgius Cedrenus , Nicephorus ++, and Suidas |||. Neither is it probable that fo diligent an historian in all the affairs of the Jews, would be silent concerning our Lord Jesus, whose preaching, life and death made fo great revolutions, not in that nation only. but gained fo many disciples over the whole world. Who can conceive that Josephus should think John the baptist, and James the brother of our Lord, worthy of such elogies as he gives them [*], and their Lord and Master be passed over in silence? Besides, the style and phrase is like to that of Josephus, as was long ago observed by the learned Huetius [+], where he also at large vindicates this testimony, from the objections some have raifed against it.

That our Lord was born in a little city of Judea, of a poor woman espoused to a carpenter, and that he fled into E_{gypt} , is owned by Celfus [\ddagger], an inveterate enemy to Christianity. That he was born in Bethlehem, is confirmed by the tables of the Romans, where the publick taxes were recorded; to which Justin Martyr, in his second apology, and Tertullian in his apology and books against Marcion, as does Chrysoftom and others, oft appeal; which they would not have done, if these had not been then extant. That a new star appeared at his birth.

^{*} Hist. lib. 1. cap. 11. Dem. Evang. lib. 4.

⁺ De scriptoribus in Joseph. operum tom. 1. pag. m. 123.

[‡] Lib. 4. Epist. 125.

 Hist. Comp. pag. 196.

| Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 1.

†† Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 38.

In Ιώσηπ. [*] Antiq. lib. 20. cap. S.

^[+] Demon. Evang. pag. m. 33, & seq. [‡] Apud Origen. contra Celsum, lib. 1.

birth, that wife men out of the East came to him, Julian does not deny; but endeavours to accommodate the rifing of the star to natural causes [1]. The dreadful cruelty of Herod in murdering the infants, is owned by Macrobius, when he writes of the jests of Augustus, he tells that the Emperor faid, He would rather be Herod's hog us than his fon []. The miracles which Jesus did, the declared enemies of the Christians, even Celsus and Julian, never durst deny. Julian says expresly, Jesus, who lived about 300 years ago, did no memorable act, but that he cured the lame and the blind, and adjured devils at Bethfaida and Bethany.—But Jesus, who commanded un-clean spirits, who walked on the sea, who did cast out devils, and, as you say, made the Heaven and the Earth; tho' none of his disciples, but only John, durst say so *, &c. This is as ample a confession as we can expect from such an adversary. The Jews, who wrote the Talmud, were avowed enemies to our Redeemer, yet there they own the truth of his miracles †. Porphyry, another declared adversary, as cited by Eusebius, says ‡, Æsculapius and the rest of the gods have withdrawn their converse with men; for since Jesus began to be worshipped, no man has received any publick help or benefit by the gods. Tacitus owns the truth of our Lord's death, faying, The author of this religion was Christ, who, in the reign of Tiberius, was put to death by Pontius Pilate, the procurator of Judea; whereby, tho' this detestable superstition was suppressed for the present, yet did it break out again, not only in Judea, the fountain of the mischief, but in the very city of Rome itself, where whatever is wicked and shameful, meets together, and is greatly advanced into reputation ||. The wonderful darkening of the Sun at our Lord's death, and earthquake, is recorded by Phlegon, whom Eufebius calls an excellent computer of the Olympiads, and that he wrote

^[||] Vid. Huetii Dem. Evang. pag. m. 29.

^[] Macrobii Saturnalia, lib. 2. cap. 4.

* Apud Cyrillum contra Julianum, lib. 6. pag. m. 132, & 146.

⁺ Talmud, parte 4. lib. 6.

[‡] De Præp. Evang. lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. m. 179.

Annalium lib. 15. cap. 44.

wrote in the 202d Olympiad. He fays *, Then was a great and wonderful eclipse beyond any that ever happened. The day at the fixth hour was so far turned into dark night, that the stars appeared, and an earthquake in Bithynia did overthrow many houses in the city of Nice. Now, this darkening of the Sun, recorded by Phlegon, and that in the holy Evangelists, at our Lord's death, are one and the fame; for both happened the fame year, viz. the 18th of Tiberius; the same hour, viz. the 6th hour of the day; and a great earthquake made both more memorable. Therefore Tertullian, when pleading the cause of the Christians against the Heathen, appeals to their publick tables and records as witnesses to this fact +. Lucianus of Antioch the martyr, appeals to the archives of Nicomedia, before the prefident of the city; Confult, says he, your annals, and you'll find, that in the time of Pilate, while Christ suffered in the middle of the day, the Sun did disappear, and chase away the day. 'Tis also observable, what is reported in the history of China, written by Hadrianus Greslonius +, that the Chinese remark, That at the same time we Christians compute Christ fuffered in the month of April, an extraordinary eclipse, beyond the ordinary laws and observations of the motions of the planets, then happened; at which event Quamvutius the Emperor was very much moved. Other testimonies concerning the truth and progress of Christianity, we may have in the following chapters of this book. What has been advanced does prove, that the history of many matters of fact in the New Testament, is confirmed by the testimony of adversaries, Jews and Heathens, who lived in the same age wherein these things were done, or near to it.

In the last place, as the Christian Religion is most certain, so 'tis most excellent. These two go hand in hand together; and therefore all that has been faid in this chapter, to demonstrate the truth of our holy Religion, ^{*} Apud Eusebium in chronico ad annum Christi 33.

⁺ Tertul. Apolog. cap. 21.

[#] Apud Huetium Dem. Evang. pag. m. 30.

ligion, does also prove its excellency. There is no other name under Heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved*, but by the name of fesus. The Religion which he has taught, is confirmed by all the prophets, who declare with one confent, that Jesus is the Mellias, that whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins +. 'Tis confirmed by a constant succession of testimonies, every one of them more clear and convincing than another: By John the Baptist, a person foretold in the Old Testament, who sealed his testimony with his blood under the New, and cannot be suspected to be byassed by compliance or interest; by the testimony of the Apostles, who ratified their doctrine by the fore sufferings they endured; by the bleffed Three, who bear record in heaven, the Father, the Son, and the Spirit. The glorious Jehovah confirmed it by a voice from Heaven, This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him. This was uttered audibly at our Redeemer's baptism, and again repeated at his transfiguration. The Holy Ghost confirms it, by accompanying the Gospel with power, in the conviction and conversion of sinners; and the Son of God confirms it by his life, death, refurrection and manifestations. The very consciences of men do testify, that the Christian Religion is well calculated to relieve us of our fears, to comfort us under afflictions, to make us humble under abundance, to support us under poverty, distresses, crosses and losses; to fanctify our natures, subdue our corruptions, pardon our guilt, and supply all our necessities. The very enemies of our holy Religion attest the truth thereof, as is already made evident. Why do the Jews fo readily hearken to impostors, falfely pretending to be the Messas, but because the time of the coming of the true Messias is already past? The Wisdom of God has thought fit to confirm our Religion by a series of events, that render the truth thereof past dispute; as the ruin of the four monarchies, who in their turns afflicted and oppressed the Church of God, whose power was broken, that the God of heaven may set up the kingdom of our Redeemer, which shall never be be destroyed, but shall stand for ever *. The ruin of the Fewish state, and the desolation of the holy land, foretold by Daniel+, was in order that the Christian Church may be established, and the Gentiles converted, and was attended with fuch remarkable circumstances, as do prove it to be the Work of God. Other Religions invented by men, are abfurd and unreasonable, as has been above demonstrated, and shall be in the progress of this treatife. Other Religions cover themselves with mysterious filence, and affected darkness; but the Rules of our holy Religion, are open to every body in the Book of God, the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament; they need not be covered with filence, diffimulation, or any difguife. The heathen philosophers mocked at the fuperstition of the people, and the people did not understand the religion of the philosophers. But the Christian Religion is satisfying and edifying to learned and unlearned. 'Tis fublime to the highest speculation of the learned; clear and plain to the most simple and unlearned, without the least degree of baseness. Other religions are fenfual and brutish. The heathens reprefented their gods in bodily shape, they served them with theatrical shews, bloody diversions of gladiators, immodest profane games; yea, in many places they offered to them inhuman bloody human victims. The priests of Baal cut themselves with knives and launces; the Samaritans and Jews disputed with fury, if God should be worshipped at Jerusalem, or at the temple at Gerizim. The Mahometans worship toward Mecca, receive the law of a vicious impostor; their religion teaches them only fenfual rewards and punishments, and is advanced by violence and oppression. But Christianity teaches, that God is a Spirit, to be worshipped in spirit and truth; that we should have charity toward all men; and be fruitful in good works. Other religions debase God, and elevate men. The heathens made their deities monstrous; and their great men, who were monsters in wickedness, they made gods. They worshipped birds, beafts, and creeping things, ferving the creature more than the Creator. But our holy Religion points out our God to be an infinite, independent, spiritual and eternal Being, who made the world, and all that therein is; all we have, we receive from him, and we cannot render any acceptable fervice to him, without his grace and affiftance. This humbles all flesh, and exalts divine grace.

^{*} Dan. ii. 44, † Chap. ix. 26, 27.

Secondly, The Christian Religion is of great advantage to fociety: it strengthens government and civil fociety among men, commanding us to obey our Superiours, to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God these which are God's. This will suppress those evils and abominations which defiled heathen countries, of which we shall hear in the second and seventh chapters of this book. This will prevent thieving, robbery, idolatry, bloodshed, and many other disorders and vices, which, by the Blefling of God, on good education and infruction in the principles of Chriftianity, might be removed and reformed, and the rifing generation made useful both in church and state. The reason why there is so little of this, is, because the Rules of our holy Religion are fo little followed. What is the world without Christianity? Nothing but a barbarous wildernefs, a cage for devils and unclean spirits! 'Tis this that teaches the duty both of princes and people, that makes us better men, more governable, and better subjects; and therefore is of great and excellent advantage even to civil fociety among men.

Thirdly, If we look on Christians as an ecclesiastick fociety, here will another excellency of our holy Religion shine. There were before the incornation of our Redeemer, many focieties in the world, linked together by bonds of laws, common interests or neighbourhood, yet divided in their inclinations and affections. But the Gospel discovers a society of people, the Church of God, living in different times and places of the world, of various stations and conditions; yet one body, one spirit, having one bone of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one bajtism, one God and Father of all*. A lociety that has Vol. I. refifted refifted the perfecutions of the greatest monarchs, that has renounced the charms of the world, been victorious over Satan's temptations, hating vice, despising the efforts of tyrants, submitting willingly to the cross of Christ; as unknown, and yet well known; as dving, and behold we live; as chastned, and not killed; as forrowful, yet alway rejoicing †: as a bush burning, yet not consumed, who in several ages have kept the same sentiments. The superstitions of the Greeks, Romans, and other nations, are dwindled into nothing; they serve only to amuse children ||: But the Christian Religion lasts for ever; it grows under the cross, and recovers itself out of its ruins, as the history of the church in all ages does discover.

Fourthly, The Excellency of the Christian Religion, appears from the purity of its scope and end. The plain and obvious defign thereof, is to glorify God, to subdue our corruptions, to teach us to live foberly, righteoufly and holily, to maintain love and charity among men, to bring forth good works, acceptable to God through Jefus Christ, so as to attain eternal happiness when time flull be no more. Now 'tis evident this cannot be the aim of Satan, a wicked and malicious spirit, the enemy of mankind. Nor can it be defigued by our corrupt nature, which only feeks to gratify the lufts of the flesh. Nor can it be effectuated by carnal policy, which may restrain us from those enormities punishable by men, but can never reform our hearts, nor hinder the inward inclinations of the mind to fin. This Religion then that promotes fuch holy ends, must descend from the God of mercy and grace, who wills men to be faved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. All the exhortations, precepts, promifes, histories, and prophecies in Scripture, tend to promote this defign. The book of God is not filled with empty speculations and curious arts; but is ftored with what is folid and edifying.

Fifthly, The Christian Religion affords an admirable remedy to all the necessities and miseries of man. We fince the fall are under fin and guilt, liable to condemnation. It discovers our Redeemer, who has made fatis-faction to divine justice, and suffered that punishment which was due to us by fin. If we accept of what he has done in our room, we shall be absolved from the guilt of fin. And tho' our nature be corrupt, bent upon fin and wickedness; yet he sanctifies and purifies us by grace, and the influences of his Holy Spirit; gives us strength to oppose indwelling sin, to fight against lust, to perform duties, to endure difficulties, and to persevere to the end. He cures our maladies, relieves us in our diftreffes, and perfects a work of grace in us, beyond what all human virtue, or precepts of morality can do.

faction

Sixthly, Our holy Religion does declare the Glory of God as our independent fovereign, the infinitely perfect, unchangeable, eternal, incomprehensible Being. It does manifest his wisdom and power in creating the world out of nothing: That he orders all by his Providence, and disposes every thing for good to his people. Here we have the glorious displays of everlasting redeeming love. God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believes in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life*. Here we have discoveries of divine fulness treasured up in our Redeemer, from which we receive grace, and more grace; of divine faithfulnefs, in performing his promises; of mercy extended to our mifery; and patience to wait on our repenting. We are directed, whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, to do all to the Glory of God +; to pray always that his name may be fanctified; that his will may be done in earth as in heaven ‡. And at the fame time we are conducted to true happiness by believing in the Redcemer, fubmitting to the Will of God without murmuring, fetting our affections on things above, that we may enjoy God in this life, and may be admitted to eternal happiness in heaven, in the life to come.

Seventhly, The Excellency of the Christian Religion shines in the purity of its morals. The strictness of its morals, and the mysterious obscurity of some of its doctrines, are means in the hand of God to enlighten our minds, and hide pride from our eyes; to replenish

our

our fouls with good principles, without flattering our lusts; to regulate our manners, and humble our corruptions. We cannot reflect on the characters of these morals, without being obliged to acknowledge they come from God. For, first, they not only subdue our lusts, but are a paradox to our reason, as * blessed are the poor in spirit; bleffed are they that mourn; bleffed are we when men shall revile you, and perfecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falfely for my sake. Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, pray for them which despitefully use you, and perfecute you +. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in beaven. The moral paradoxes of heathen philosophers were far inferiour to these. 2dly, The Chriftian morals mortify and fubdue our corruptions, felflove, and the pleasures of the slesh. Pride and vainglory are buried and hid from the Christians eyes: we must not be angry at our brother without a cause; nor hate our neighbour in our heart; nor say to him, thou fool; nor look on a woman to lust after her ‡. We must deny ourselves, take up our cross and follow Christ, or we cannot be bis disciples ||. We must abandon all beloved fins: were they as near or dear to us as a right eve, we must pluck them out; or as a right hand, we must cut them off . Certainly our blessed Lord, who taught these sublime and necessary precepts, is a teacher sent from God. 3dly, All the principles of the Christian morals go on the foot of humility, that we must be meck and lowly; poor in spirit; like little children; wife as serpents, harmless as doves. 4thly, They are comprehended in very few words; as, to love God with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves. Yet we cannot perform this, but by the affiftance of divine grace; nor tafte of all the fweet advantages of religion in the full extent, in this imperfect state: but we may have such a prelibation and foretaste of its excellency, in the ferenity of mind, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, assurance of our interest in the love of God, hearing of prayer, manifestations tions of divine favour, deliverance from doubts, fears and innumerable diffresses, and charming views of the love of Christ, as may endear a religious life, commend the ways of God, strengthen us for his service, and make us long for those eternal pleasures, which are at God's right-hand for evermore.

Finally, Even the mysteries of our Religion are such as commend it: They are so great and sublime, so con-fonant to the nature of things, and so nearly linked with the principles of right reason; they are such as eye has not feen, nor ear heard, nor can it enter into the heart of man to conceive. Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifest in the slesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, believed on in the world, and received up into glory*. They are not like the fables and reveries of the poets, which wicked minds greedily received, even when reason condemned them. The creation of the world by God almighty, the redemption of mankind by the ministry of the Mediator, the expiatory facrifice of Christ, the communion of faints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the dead, and life everlasting, are truths majestick and reasonable, having nothing in them that is absurd to a mind, that is not blinded with prejudice or infidelity. If there be any thing in these, or other truths, which we cannot eafily comprehend, while our foul is darkened with fin in this imperfect state; let it be considered, had we remained in a state of innocence, we had been under no fuch difficulty; and when we are admitted into glory, we shall understand them clearly. The holy angels know them exactly; the infinite mind most perfectly. Why should we admit carnal reasonings against divine Revelation? Rather let us humble ourselves before God. and feek that he may cause us to understand the wonders in his law. Many mysteries that were hid under a veil in the Old Testament, are clearly discovered in the Gofpel, even the promises of the resurrection, of the last judgment, and life eternal, are more full and evident than before the coming of Christ. And the reason is plain, because our Redeemer knew plainly and perfectly L 3 th:

150 Of the Origin of Idolatry.

the whole Will of God, and hath manifested the same to his Church. Tho' we cannot, in our present state, know all these mysterious truths perfectly; yet, if with humility we enquire into them, and with saith and love we receive, believe, and improve them, then they will appear bright, useful, and edifying to us.

CHAP. II.

Of the Origin and Progress of Idolatry, from the Creation of the World to the Birth of Christ; where the Deities of the Syrians, Phenicians, Egyptians, Canaanites, Greeks, Romans, and other Nations in that Period are considered.

N the former Chapter I have confirmed the Truth of our Holy Christian Religion; which God, by his gracious Providence, does protect, preserve and advance in the world, making Satan's kingdom fall before it like lightning. But before I enter upon the overthrow of heathenish is olatry, 'tis necessary we should consider the state of the heathen world, and the great progress idolatry had made before the incarnation of our Redeemer. In order to this, we must look back to the fall of our first parents.

When Adam by his fin, made apostacy from God, he forseited his right to the tree of life, and made himself liable to death and all miseries; blindness, ignorance, superstition, and a deluge of evils did creep in upon the minds of his posterity. Cain, and his wicked race, did carry the desection still surther: he went out from the presence of the Lord*. And 'tis probable he, or his offspring, did set up societies separate from the true Church that was continued in the race of Seib. Yet we have sew footsteps of idolatry in the Ante-diluvian world. After the flood it made considerable progress, especially after the vain attempt of building the tower of Babel, and the confusion of languages, which God inflicted on that wicked age for their sin. This consustion happened about the one hundred and second year after the flood. The heathens can give no distinct account thereof: we learn it from the secred Scripture. The posterity of Nimrod carried idolatry to Chaldea, Babylon, and other places. The offspring of Cham, on whom his father pronounced a curse*, seem to have taken it into Legyl; and other parts of Africa; of which Dr. Cumberland, in his Phenician history, finds some footsteps, from the fragment of Sanchoniathon, preserved by Eusebius; of which afterward. It is yet more certain, that Abra an's progenitors, Terab, Nabor and Haran, served other Gods $\frac{1}{2}$. If we reckon this from the birth of Abrabam, it will be about $352$ years after the flood, 2008 years from the creation of the world.

Chap.2. Of the Origin of Idolatry.

151

Before we enter further upon the origin of idolatry, 'tis proper we explain what we understand by the name. Idolatry originally then is a Greek word, a composition of two others. The first slowner, a diminutive of sides, fignifying an image. The feeond harpela, fignifying worship. Hence is usher'd in another fignification of larger extent, viz. the word idel is taken for every thing, men place in God's room, and pay divine honours to, whether it be men, the work of men's hands, or the product of God and nature. Thus the Apostle says ", We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is no other God but one. In this fense 'tis taken by the Septuagint, I Chr. xvi. 26. ci θεοί των εθνων είδωλα, All the Gods of the heathen are idols. This fignification of the word is established by custom. If we shew an excessive love to a thing, 'tis said, we idolize it. Idolatry then implies not only the worshipping of images, but also of creatures. Thus there are two forts of it: in the first, they worshipped the works of God, the fun, moon, stars, angels, devils, men and beasts. And in the second they worshipped the work of their hands, even images. L 4 Som:

^{*} Gen.ix. 25. † De præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 9.

Some people adored God under the representation of an image. Thus the Israelites worshipped the true God who had brought them out of Egypt, under the reprefentation of a golden calf; and the ten tribes, in the reign of Jeroboam and his successors, did the same, under the figure of the calves fet up at Dan and Bethel.

Dr. Owen * divides the whole of idolatrous worship into Sabaism and Hellenism; the former consists in the worship of sun, moon and stars, and the host of heaven; the latter is the worship the Greeks and Romans added, viz. the veneration of great men dead and gone, and of Demons. Sabaism was the most ancient of the two, as appears from the book of Job, one of the first books writ in the world; while he declares himself free of idolatry, he fays +, If I beheld the fun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness; and my beart bath been secretly enticed, or my mouth kiffed my hand: this also were an iniquity to be junished by the judge; for I should have denied the God that is above. The law of God expresly condemns this ‡: but in Job's days they were not come to that height of folly and wickedness, as afterwards when they dedicated horses to the sun ||. They only then adored him by the actions of their body. These blinded nations perceiving these glorious luminaries do govern day and night, wershipped the creature more than the Creator, who is God blessed for ever. Tho' Sabaism be very ancient, yet I think it highly probable, that in some few ages after the flood, the nations who were strangers to the common-wealth of Ijrael, began to adore their great men who had founded their empire, as Noah, Cham, Misraim, and others; of which we may find some examples in the fequel of this chapter.

Dr. Prideaux gives his thoughts of the rife of idolatry thus : The true religion which Noah taught his posterity, was that which Abraham pradified, the worshipping of one God, the supreme governour of all things, with hopes in his mercy mercy through a mediator. For the necessity of a mediator between God and man was a general notion, which obtained among all mankind from the beginning; for being conscious of their own meanness, vileness and impurity, they could not conceive how it was possible of themselves alone to have access to the all-holy, all-glorious, and supreme Creator and Governour of all things. They considered him as too high and too pure, and themselves too low and polluted for such a converse; and therefore concluded there must be a mediator, by whose means only they could make any address to him, and by whose intercession alone any of their petitions could be accepted of. But no clear revelation being then made of the mediator, whom God appointed, because as yet he had not been manifested to the world, they took upon them to address unto him by mediators of their own chusing: and their notion of the sun, moon and stars being, that they were tabernacles, or habitations of intelligences, which animated thefe orbs, in the same manner as the soul animates the body of man, and were causes of their motions, and that these intelligences were of a middle fort between God and them, they thought these the properest things to be mediators between God and them; and therefore the planets being the nearest of all these heavenly bodies, and generally look'd on to have the greatest influence on this world, they have made choice of them in the first place as their Gods-Mediators, who were to mediate with the supreme God for them, and to procure from him mercies and favours which they prayed for; and accordingly they directed divine worship to him as such. And here began all the idolatry that has been practifed in the world.

^{*} Theologoumena, pag. m. 181. + Job xxxi. 26—28. † Deut. iv. 19. and xvii. 3. | 2 Kings xxii. 11.  Connection of the Hiltory of the Old and New Testament, Part 1. pag. m. 177

Tho' Hellenism consides principally in the worship of dead men and Demons, yet the Grecians at first adored the sun, moon and stars, as even Plato owns*, that the first inhabitants of Greece did worship only those Gods whom the Barbarians do now, that is, the sun, the moon, and the stars; and perceiving all things to run in a continual course, they called them $\Theta_{\varepsilon o v_{\varepsilon}}$ Gods, from, $\theta_{\varepsilon \varepsilon v_{\varepsilon}}$ to run. Tho' Varro among the Romans, and Hessod among the Greeks, reckon thirty thousand Deities;

Deities; yet as their own poet tells them *, they had not fo many by far in ancient times. But I shall afterward give an account of the idolatry practifed among the Greeks and Romans: mean time I shall offer a remark concerning the antiquity and use of images.

The use of images, in the idolatrous worship of the Gentiles, was not by far so ancient as idolatry itself. Laban's Teraphim is the first image we find any where. Eusebius proves by the testimonies of Plato, Porphyry, and feveral others, that neither the ancient Egyptians, nor Phenicians, nay, nor even the Greeks, had any images for a long time. He fays +, The first and most ancient men did not trouble themselves to build any temples, or make any images, because the art of painting and carving, and even of building, was not then invented; neither was there any mention of those who were afterward called Gods, or Heroes. They had neither then Jupiter, Saturn, Neptune, Apollo, Juno, nor Bacchus, nor any other male or female deity; a great number of which were afterwards owned both by Greeks and Barbarians; yea, there was no good nor evil Demon then worshipped, but only the stars which appear in the beavens. The Persians did preserve their worship free of images for a long time, as appears by Herodote $, who fays, The Perfians had neither altars, nor temples, nor statues; they laughed at those who worshipped the Gods in such a manner; they sacrificed on the tops of mountains to the king of heaven, whom they called Jupiter; for they did not take their Gods from among men, as the Greeks. Plutarch fays ||, King Numa forbad the Romans to represent God in the form of man or beast; nor was there any painted or graven image of a deity admitted among them for the space of the first hundred and sixty years; all which time their temples and chapels were free and pure from idols and images, which seemed too mean and beggarly

^{*} Juvenal.Satyr.13.ver.46. & feqq.

Nec turba Deorum

Talis, ut est hodie; contentaque sidera paucis
Numinibus miserum urgebant Atlanta minori
Pondere———

[†] De prop. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 9. pag. m. 29. Edit. 1688. ± Lib. 1. cap. 131. || Life of Numa, Engl. Edit. Vol. 1. pag. 24, 25.

trunks

beggarly representations of God, to whom no access was allowed, but by the mind raised and elated by divine contemplation. Varro, cited by Augustine, affures us , That the ancient Romans for more than one hundred and seventy years worshipped their Gods without images: If they had done so still, the Gods might have been served with greater purity; and he concludes, that those who first brought in images into worship, took away the fear due to the deities, and led people into error. It was Tarquinius Priscus, who introduced images in imitation of the Greeks. Athenagoras fays †, That even among the Greeks, till the art of painting and statuary was found out, there was no mention of images of the Gods, but Saurias Samius, Craton Sicyonius, Cleanthes Corinthius, and Core Corinthia, invented these arts. Dædalus and Theodorus Milesius added to them. Soon after the images and statues of the Gods were framed, we can yet relate the names of those workmen who made them: Diana of Ephesus and Minerva, whom the Greeks call 'Adnyn, were framed by Endyus, a scholar of Dædalus; the Cnidian Venus, by Praxiteles; the Samian and Argive Juno, by Smilis; and the Epidaurian Æsculapius, by the hands of Phidias.—If they be Gods, why are they not from the beginning? Why flood they in need to be framed by the art of man? Nay, to be fure they are only earth, stones, and matter fashioned by curious art. Tacitus says of the Germans, they had no images nor foot-steps of foreign superstition ‡. When images were first used, they were made of coarse materials. While sculpture was in its infancy, some of their statues were made of potters clay, well burned like our earthen-veffels, and afterward painted with vermilion. After that, they chused wood as the easiest for carving. Many statues of idols in the Old-Testament times were made thereof | : yea, there were fome people, who made things without any human refemblance, the objects of their devotion. Hence we find frequent mention of Deos Caudicarios, ^{} De civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 31.

⁺ Legatio pro Christianis, pag. 16, 17. Edit. 1686. ‡ Nulla simulacra, nullum peregrina supersitionis vestigium. De oribus Germanorum, pag.m.657.

§ Isa. xliv. 14—18. moribus Germanorum, pag.m. 657.

trunks of trees turned into Gods. Arnobius informs us *. the Arabians worshipped a stone, the Scythians a sword, the Thespians a branch, the Icarians a smoothed piece of wood for the Goddess Diana; those of Pessinus, a slint for the mother of the Gods, and the Romans, an half-pike for Mars; these were the emblems of their deities, a sword and balf-pike for the God of war. Indeed the Gentiles did not confider their most curious statues as really Gods, but as emblems of those deities they worshipped. It was the common opinion, that these images were only to revive in men the remembrance of the object of their adoration. Hence Celsus asks, Who, but a fool, can imagine these images are real Gods? † The heathens when pressed by the arguments of the Christians, on account of their imageworship, said, You err; we do not adore the wood, bras, gold or silver, as if these metals were of themselves Gods; but we worship the Gods, who by virtue of the dedication inhabit these images ‡. To which Lastantius gives this answer, If the Gods are present by virtue of the consecration, what occasion is there for images? What need have I for my friend's picture, if my friend be near me in person? God, who is a spirit every where present, never abfent, needs no image to supply his place . The same answer may be returned to the desences of the papists, concerning their idolatrous image-worship. Thus far concerning the origin of idolatry. I shall now consider the state thereof in the several nations of the ancient heathen world before the coming of Christ; which will further discover its origin, and also how absurd it is, and how great a mercy we enjoy, who by the light of the Gospel are delivered from it.

The Greek and Roman idolatry took its rife from that of the Egyptians, Phenicians and Syrians. 'Tis a certain maxim, that religion, as well as learning, and mankind itself, had its first origin in the east; therefore we shall first explain the state of idolatry in these eastern countries, and particularly give some account of the idols idols mentioned in the facred Scriptures of the Old Testament.

^{*} Contra gentes, lib. 6. pag. m. 222. † Apud Origen. contra Celfum, lib. 7. ‡ Arnobius, lib. 6. pag. 229. || Institut. lib. 2. cap. 2.

The Teraphim is the most ancient name given to an idol in the Word of God; see the Texts quoted at the raphim in David's bed, to deceive the guard fent to watch him. This fense is applicable to the texts already cited; neither does Hosea iii 4. overturn it. The words of that text are, The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, without a prince, and without a facrifice, and without an image, and without Teraphim. Where the prophet gives us an exact description of the state of the Jews under their dispersion, without a king or civil government, without a facrifice and ephod, without true worship, and without an image or Teraphim, that is, without idolatrous worship. By the by we may take notice, that the Hebrew word Teraphim, is frequently in our version rendred image. The prophet says, the Yews shall not be meer heathen idolaters, addicted to magick; they shall neither ask counsel of the true God, nor confult the false oracle of Teraphim. Thus David Kimchi a Few understands that text. The Teraphim probably were not used by Laban for magick divination; but that they were afterwards made use of for that end, appears from Ezekiel xxi. 21. For the king of Babylon frond at the parting of the way to use divination; he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images; in the Hebrew, Teraphim. Zech. x. 2. The idols, or Teraphim, have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen alve. I might here have digreffed to speak of the several forts of divination among the heathen: they who are curious may fee what the learned Mr. Selden has writ concerning it; but I shall keep to the subject I am upon. The Teraphim feem to have been domestick Gods, the same called Lares, or domestick tutelar Gods, by the Latins. Laban calls them his Gods, not his God. Monf. Jurieu + conceives they were the images of Noah and Shem; of Noah, as the common father of the world after the flood, and of Shem as the patriarch of the family of Laban. Had they been more than two, Rachel could not eafily have concealed them among her camels furniture. Ovid represents the Lares as two, when he speaks of the nymph Lara their mother ‡. As to the external form of the Teraphim, Jurieu represents it thus ||. The eastern nations preserved in one of the remote parts of their house the relicks of their ancestors: if they had none of these, their posterity being numerous, they erected empty tombs of stone, wood or earth, and upon these they fet the Teraphim at the two extremities. Micab  having got a fight of some of these oracles among the heathen, and being ignorant of the abominations they practifed by them, thought they might be fanctified by dedicating them to God, tho' by idolaters they were defigned for enquiring of the dead: but this was his error.

^{*} Gen. xxxi. 19, 39, 34. Judge xvii. 4, 5. and xviii. 5, 14. 1 Sam xix. 13. 2 Kings xxiii. 24. Ezek. xxi. 21. Hof. iii. 4. Zech. x. 2. † De Diis Syris fyntagma, cap. 1, 2.

Next to the Teraphim, the history of the Old Testament mentions the Golden Calf, cast and worshipped by the Israelites in the wilderness*, at the foot of mount Horeb, when but a few days before they had heard the awful voice of God, forbidding the worship of images. This dreadful sin does sufficiently discover the brutish inclinations of that people. The Jews own all the miseries that have since befallen them, are morsels of the Golden Calf. 'Tis questioned if this idol had the figure of a calf, or of a tall ox. In the book of Exodus 'tis called a calf; the psalmist calls it an ox; (†) They changed their glory ⁺ Histoire critique des Dogmes & des Cultes, vol. 2. cap. 3.

[#] Fastorum lib. 2. ver. 615.

Fitque gravis geminosque parit qui compita servant, Et vigilant nostra semper in ade Lares.

[#] Jurieu ibid. cap. 4.  Judges xviii. 14.

^{*} Exod. xxxii. (

⁽⁺⁾ Pfal. cvi. 20.

glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass. 'Tis probable it had the figure of a full-grown ox. The Jews fay it weighed 200 quintals of gold; that is, as Jurieu computes it, 225 talents, or 20000 livres. As to the rise of this kind of idolatry, the Israelites did not invent it of themselves, but did imitate the Egyptians: having lived about 200 years in Egypt, their minds were corrupted with some of the abominations of that country, as several texts of Scripture do intimate. Joshua commands them, to put away the Gods which their fathers served on the other side of the slood, and in Egypt: and serve the Lord ||. The prophet Ezekiel minds them, That they committed whoredoms in Egypt, they committed whoredoms in their youth \(\dtau\). And Stephen the protomartyr, That their fathers in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, saying unto Aaron, make us Gods to go before us . All these texts declare, that they made the calf in imitation of the Egyptians. This may lead us to consider the idolatry of Egypt.

Tho' the Egyptians were reputed the wifest of the Gentiles, yet they appear in their religious worship of beasts, to have acted contrary to common sense. The prophet Ezekiel intimates that the Jews were tainted with it ++: Behold every form of creeping things and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the bouse of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about. And the Apostle Paul (*) tells us, That the Gentiles changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things. 'Tis alledged the worship of brutes was the veil under which were concealed the mysteries of their religion, as their morals were hidden under the hieroglyphicks. But 'tis abominable to adore sheep, cats, bulls, dogs, cows, storks, apes, birds of prey, wolves, and several forts of oxen, as the Egyptians did, under whatever pretence. The very heathens ridiculed this kind of idolatry. Lucian speaks [|] Joshua xxiv. 14. †† Ezek. viii. 10.

[‡] Ezek. xxiii. 3.
(*) Rom. i. 23.

^{} Act;. vii. 39, 40.

of it thus †, Go into Egypt, there you'll see fine things, worthy of heaven, forsooth; Jupiter with the sace of a ram, Mercury as a fine dog, Pan is become a goat, another god is Ibis, another the crocodile, and another the ape. There many shaven priests gravely tell, the gods being afraid of the rebellion of the giants, surked under these shapes; they mourn over the sacrifices, but if Apis their great god die, there is no body so prosane as not to shave his head and mourn, tho' he had the purple hair of Nisus. This Apis is but a god chosen out of the slock. These things seem to me to require a Heraclitus or Democritus; the one to laugh at their madness, and the other to weep at their ignorance. Thus Lucian. The reader may also see at the bottom of the page, how Juvenal || and Virgil ‡ deride them.

Diodorus Siculus reports*, That a Roman soldier having killed a cat in Egypt, the mob ran to his house, to tear him in pieces, and neither the intreaties of the nobility, nor the terror of Rome, could free him from punishment, tho' he had done it ignorantly; which, says he, I do not tell from hare report, but, in my travels, I was eye-witness to it. The same author says, That when a famine prevailed in Egypt, to that degree, that they were forced to eat the human stell of one another; yet none was accused of tasting these facred creatures. When a dog happened to die, the whole house went into mourning. And if any of these beasts die, if there he food laid up for the people in the house, 'tis impious † De facrif. operum, tom. 1. pag.m. 369. || Juv. Sat. 15. ab initio.

> Suis nefcit, Volusi Bithynice, qualia demens Ægyptus portenta colit? Crocodilon adorat Pars hec: illa pavet saturam serpentibus Ibim. Essigies sacrinitet aurea Cercopitheci.

Illic caruleos, hic piscem fluminis, illic
Oppida tota canem venerantur, nemo Dianam.
Porrum & cape nesas violare, ac frangere morsu.
O santas gentes, quibus hec nascuntur in hortis
Numina! Lanatis animalibus abstinet omnis Mensa. Nesas illic futum jugulare capella, Carnibus humanis vesci licct.—

[#] Eneid. S. ver. 678. Omnigenûmq; Deum monstra & latrator Anubis * Bibl. Hist. lib. 1. cap. 83.  Ibid. cap. 84.

impious to make use of it. 'Tis recorded by * Polyanus, That when Cambyses, Emperor of Persia, was making war against Egypt, he found it necessary to take the city Pelufium, which was a key to the whole country; and perceiving the garrison strong, and the besieged galling him with their arrows, he placed in the front of his army, who were to make the affault, a great number of cats, dogs, sheep, and the like animals, which were there reckoned sacred. The Egyptians not daring to throw a dart, or shoot an arrow, for fear of killing those creatures, he made himself easily master of the place. Each city and district in Egyst entertained a peculiar devotion for some beast or other, which, fays Diodorus Siculus +, is easier to relate than to believe, unless one had seen it with their eyes. The city Lentopolis worshipped a lion; the city Mendez, a goat; Memphis, the Apis; the city of the sun, the Mnevis, and the people in the lake Myris adored the crocodile. These animals were maintained in or near the temples with delicate meats, were bathed, anointed, perfumed, had beds prepared for them, and she-ones kept like misses for their use. When any of them happened to die, they prepared sumptuous funerals for them, and tombs richer than for their own children. This idolatry had footing in Egypt in the time of Moses and the patriarchs; for when Pharaoh offered liberty for the Israelites to facrifice in the land of E_{gypt} , Moses replied, Shall we sacrifice to the Lord our God the abomination of the Ægyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us ||? That is, if we facrifice in Egypt, oxen, sheep, or goats, which are the gods of the E_{gyp} tians, they will massacre us. Hence Moses says, every Shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians; for the shepherds were not scrupulous to kill and eat the beasts of their flock. Origen, against Celfus, speaks of a very foolish deity of the Egyptians; pardon me that I speak of it in Latin: Taceo nunc eos Ægyptios, qui venerantur ventris crepitum **.

The

The Egyptians had a veneration for all oxen, yet two were celebrated among them above all the rest. The first, called Asis, had his chief temple and residence in the city Memphis, called by the Jews, Muph. The fe-cond, called Mnevis, refided at Heliopolis, that is the city of the sun, called by the Jews, On, where Potipherab, in Moses's time, was high-priest. The marks of Apis were these, his body was to be all black, excepting a fpot of white on his forehead; he was to have an eagle on the back, a crescent on the side, a node under the tongue called Cantharus, the hair standing upright, the contrary way near the tail; he was to be conceived by lightning, and being conducted to Memphis, they placed him in a rich temple. He was not to live the full course of nature, but to be drowned in a facred spring, and then to be buried with great pomp and noise. Once in a year they celebrated a feast in honour of his birth, for seven days; during which space, as they faid, the crocodile did no harm to any body in the river. Pliny fays*, "That after Apis is buried, they feek for another with "the fame marks. They appear in mourning, and have their hair till they find him. When he is found, " he is conducted by the priests to Memphis, where are "two temples or nuptial halls, intended for the predic-"tion of future events. If he goes to one of these, it " fignifies a good omen; if to the other, bad fortune. 44 As to private persons, he presages things to come, by 45 taking or resulting those things they offer him to eat. " Cæsar Germanicus offered him meat, but he turned "his head to the other fide, which portended that " great man's death, as happened foon after. When he " appears abroad, guards are appointed for his free paf-" fage, to keep off the crowd: at the fame time he is attended with a great many children, who fing verses to his praise." This is the account we have of this beaftly idol from Pliny, and from many other ancient authors †. If it be enquired, how could they find a beaft ^{*} Hist. mundi, lib. 8. cap. 46. per totum. † Ælian Hist. animalium, lib. 11. cap. 9. Pompon. Mela, lib. 11. cap. 9. Plutarch of Isis and Osiris. Herodot. lib. 3. cap. 27-30.

Chap.2. Of the Egyptian Idolatry. with all these marks? I answer with Augustine ||, that the Egyptian priests being magicians, it was no great matter to make the cow bring forth fuch a calf as they defigned, and with fuch marks on his body. We fee even human industry goes a great way. Jacob, by setting rods in the gutters, made Laban's sheep bring forth spotted and speckled lambs; and the arts of satan may easily deceive a fuperstitious deluded people to their own ruin. When the kingdom of fatan fell like lightning after the death of our Saviour, the case changed; Apis could not be sound. Spartian indeed tells us ‡, "That the Emperor Adrian having settled affairs in Britain, received advice of a great " fedition at Alexandria, occasion'd by finding the ox " Apis, after many years vain fearch for him; which " caused great tumults among the people, every place " claiming the custody of him." But even by this author it appears, that the religion of Apis was then in a manner buried in oblivion: For if it had not been so, they could not have contended for the place of his refidence, which was unquestionably at Memphis. When Julian the emperor, commonly called the apostate, endea-voured to re-establish the Egyptian idolatry, Ammianus Marcellinus * does not tell us, that he succeeded in it, or that he found the ox Apis: so that this part of their religion was abolished a long time before the rest of the pagan worship, for want of the beast that had the requisite marks. But as long as they were able to meet with Apis, to be placed in the temple of Memphis, the people paid a fingular devotion to him; they facrificed victims, especially red oxen; and the women paid him a most infamous homage, by discovering their nakedness before Cambyses, upon his return from his unsuccessful Ethiopian expedition, found the Egyptians rejoicing in the city Memphis, because they had found Apis. The Emperor conceiving they mocked him, commanded Aris to be brought to his presence, and laughing at such a foolish Deity, wounded him with his fword in the thigh, and M 2

De civitate Dei, lib. 18. cap. 5. # Vita Adriani. Lib. 22. pag. m. 574. + Diod. Siculus, lib. 1. cap. 85.

ordered the priefts to be whipped, and the people who observed such solemnities to be killed. Thus was the festival concluded, fays Herodote *. The poor beast languished in the temple and died, and was buried privately by the priests. And the Egyptians say, that after this wicked fact, Cambyses was still troubled with madness. Plutarch fays, that Apis being killed, was thrown to the dogs, to be devoured by them; and therefore the Egyptians razed the dogs out of the catalogue of their Deities | . Darius Ochus, another Persian king, killed A_l is, and eat him at a feast with his friends +. The Egyttians revenged themselves; for Bagoas the eunuch assassinated Ochus, and threw his body to the cats, and of his thighbone made hafts for fwords, to represent the cruelty of this tyrant's mind, fays Ælian ‡.

What was fignified by this monstrous Egyptian idolatry, is not easy to conceive. Many fables have been invented to palliate its enormities. But 'tis not my bufiness to make apology for these abominations of the Diodorus Siculus has been at some pains to varnish over these enormities; and Plutarch, who wrote his book in the reign of the Emperor Trajan, in his treatife of Isis and Osiris, endeavours many ways, not confiftent among themselves, to explain these fables , fo as to bring those Egyptian rites, which then were in difgrace at Rome, into favour with that city, as agreeing in substance with the Religion of Rome, and other heathen countries, especially Greece. In which attempt he was unfuccessful, tho' he turns the Egyptian idola-Others affert, that in Egypt they try into an allegory. worshipped these beasts, by reason of the benefits they received from them: The ox, for its use in agriculture; the sheep, for their wool; the Ibis, by reason of its use in physick, and its eating serpents; the Ichneum, n, a kind of rat, because it used to eat the crocodiles; and the crocodiles themselves, because they rendering the paffage passage of the Nile very dangerous, prevented the robbers of Cyrene from passing the river to pillage the country. This as probable that the animals worshipped in Egypt, were figures to represent their Gods. 'Tis well known that every one of the heathen Deities had some beast, tree, or plant consecrated to them: Thus the pigeon was dedicated to Venus, the dragon and the owl to Minerva, the peacock to Juno, the eagle to Jupiter, and the cock to Escalagius and the Sun. The Egyptians affigned to their Gods certain animals as their figures or representatives, and thus they were introduced into temples, as afterwards images were into some Christian Churches, and they began to worship them. Herodote says *, The Egyptian men and women reckon it an honour to have the feeding, or bringing up of those animals committed to their care, wherein the son succeeds the father. beasts every crizen pays his vows, whereby they pay their homage to that God, to whom the beast is consecrated: Euxoμενοι τω θεω τοῦ αν ἢ τὸ θηςίον. Which last words prove, that they did not worship the beast as a God, but as a figure representing that God to whom it belonged. To the same purpose Plutarch says +, they hold Apis to be the lively image of Osiris.

^{*} Lib. 3. cap. 29, 30.

Of Itis and Ofiris, Morals, pag. m. 1305:

Varia Hiftoria, lib. 6. cap. 8.

Tho' we live at a vast distance of time, after that Egyptian idolatry was overthrown, yet I find a late, and he feems to be an ingenuous learned traveller, Monf. Lucas ‡, in the relation he gives of his travels in Egypt, presents us with the picture of the images of those beasts, which were the objects of their idolatry; as the Apis, the Crocodile, and others, as he faw the fame engraven on stone at the doors, and several interior places of the great labyrinth, called the palace of Charon, at the fouth extremity of the lake Maris. Hence he conceives that labyrinth to have been a fort of Pantheon, in honour of all the divinities of Egypt, and especially dedicated to the Sun. If so, that vast labyrinth is a lasting monument of that monstrous idolatry. M 3

After

^{*} Lib. 2. cap. 65. pag. m. 114. + Of Isis and Osiris. ‡ Voyage du Sieur Paul Lucas, tom. 2. pag. 42. printed 1720.

After all that has been faid of the fignification of this worship, which the Egyptians gave to beasts, I conceive the truest meaning that can be given of it, is that of the Apostle Paul, speaking concerning the Gentiles ||; When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools; and changed the glory of the uncorrupt ble God, into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.— For this cause, God gave them up unto vile affections.

The whole story of Isis and Osiris, as delivered by Plutarch, is very prolix, and full of extravagant imaginations and monitrous fictions; in comparison of which, the Metamorphoses and Fables of the Greek and Latin poets may pass for rational and well contrived. Plutarch conceives, that by Osiris, the Sun is to be underflood, for these reasons: (1.) The images of Osiris do carry a resplendent lustre, to represent the beams and light of the Sun. (2.) In the hymns composed in the praise of Osiris, they address themselves to him, who rests in the bosom of the Sun. (3.) After the autumnal equinox, they celebrate a certain feast, all in mourning, called apanouòs Osiridis, the disappearance of Osiris, fignifying the removal of the Sun at a greater distance in winter. (4.) About the winter folftice, they enquire after Osiris, and cause a cow to take seven rounds about his temple, to intimate that in feven revolutions of the Moon, the Sun will return to the fummer folftice. (5.) Every day they offer incense and sweet odours to the Sun: At his rifing, they present rosin; at noon myrrh; and at fun-fetting, a composition called Kiphi. Macrebius, who finds the Sun almost in every thing, gives other reafons to prove that the Sun is fignified by Oficis*. Diodorus Siculus says †, Osiris, in the Egyptian language, signifies πολυοφθαλμός, many eyed. The Emperor Julian, who endeavoured to restore Paganism, when, by the light of the Gospel, it was almost banished out of the world, ^{||} Rom. i. 21—26. + Bibl. Hift. lib. 1.

^{*} Saturnalia, lib. r. pag. m. 367.

Chap.2. Of the Egyptian Idolatry.

be-

makes the Sun the great God, and the parent of all men. He fays the Sun and Man begets man ‡, ἄνθρωπος ἄνθρω-πον γεννά και ήλιος.

If we look further into the chaos of Egyptian Idolatry, we may find some tracks of Noah. The word Apis signifying my father, suits exactly with Noah, the father of the fathers of the world after the flood. Noab cultivated the ground; nothing could be more properly confecrated to him, than an ox, the chief inftrument of agriculture. In Plutarch's story of Isis and Osiris, 'tis faid, that after the privy parts of Osiris could not be recovered. they were forced to make others of plaister-work. This has a relation to the history of Cham, who looked on his father's nakedness while he was drunk and asleep. The Rabbins add, that he intended to make him incapable of procreation. The learned Dr. Cumberland, bishop of Peterborough, finds also some foot-steps here of Misraim the fon of Cham, grandchild of Noah, the first king of Egypt, and founder of their monarchy. In the very preface to the Ten Commandments, Egypt is called by the name of Misraim in the Hebrew *. And long before that, even at the burial of Jacob, the mourning of the Egyptians was by the Canaanites called Abel Mifrain +. He conceives that Osiris is only an appropriated title of honour, fignifying the Prince, and Isis is Ishah his wife ||. Other parts of the fable were devifed long afterward.

We may also find here some hints of Moses, tho' disguised under a heap of rubbish, especially under the story of Typhon, the great enemy of the Egyptian deities. Huetius sinds all the sables of the heathen, and of their Gods, to signify Moses: but he is not out of the way, when he finds him here . For (1.) Typhon, according to Plutarch | was of a ruddy colour; Moses was exceeding fair. A fair complexion, next approaching to red, was a great rarity in Egypt, and in great esteem there, as well as over all Africa. (2.) The word Typhon signifies inundation, in the Hebrew and Phenician languages. They

. . . .

M 4

[†] Oratio in regem Solem. Opera Juliani, pag. 131. * Exod. xx. 2. † Gen. l. 11. | Phenician History, pag. 45, 98.

^{} Demon. Evang. pag. m. 87. Edit. 1690. | Of Ilisand Offris.

bestowed this odious name upon Moses, because by his means Pharaoh and his hoft were fwallowed up by the sea. The priests, says Plutarch, abominate the sea, and call salt the scum of Typhon. Tis one of those things that are forbidden at table. They do not salute any pilots or seamen. They have such an abomination for fish, that when in their bieroglyphics they intend to represent a detestable thing, they do it by the figure of a fish. He says also, When the river Phædrus turned the wind somewhat roughly, about the dawning of the day, Isis was so much displea-sed and angry, that she dried it quite *. (3.) Typhon was esteemed to be a great enemy to their Gods, who engaged in so cruel a war against them, that they were obliged to shelter themselves in the bodies of beasts +, one in an ox, another in a sheep, &c. This seems to have a relation to what God did in Egypt, where he exercised judgments upon all their Gods #. He fmote even their facred animals. (4.) Typhon, with the affiftance of 72 of his affociates, plotted against Osiris. Moses brought the people out of Egy/t, and conducted them thro' the wilderness, by the assistance of 70 elders, whom he elected as his partners in the government. (5.) Typhon was the brother of Ofiris king of Egypt. Moses being reputed the son of Pharaoh's daughter, was consequently the supposed brother of that prince. (6.) The sable says, Typhon was aided and in consederacy with the queen of Ethiopia: Plutarch calls her name Ayso ||. Zippora, Moses's wife, was an Ethiopian woman. (7.) Typhon came into Egypt upon an ass, to fight Isis and Osiris; therefore the Egyptians abominate this creature, and give the name of an ass to the king of Persia, who killed their Apis. Moles having received his commission from God to oblige Pharaob to fuffer the Israelites to leave his territories, took his wife and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and returned to the land of Egypt . Finally, it is remarkable

 Exod. iv. 20.

^{*} Of Isis and Osiris, Morals. pag. m. 1294.

⁺ Plutarch of Isis and Osiris. Apollodori Bibliotheca, pag. m.257.

[±] Exod.xii.12. Numb. xxxiii.4. | Of Isis and Osiris, Morals, pag. 1292.

able which Plutarch observes *, That Typhon having lost the field, fled six days journey upon an ass's back; having by this means escaped, he begat two sons, Hierosolymus and Judæus: 'tis evident, says he, that those who relate this would draw the history of the Jews into the fable.

Before I leave this subject, allow me to observe, that

Plutarch in his treatife of Isis and Osiris, has several footsteps of divine truths, tho they be larded with fables. For example, he fays +, Of this opinion, fays he, I offure you I am, that the beatitude and felicity of eternallife, which Jupiter enjoys, consists in that he is ignorant of nothing that's done, and also that immortality, if spoiled of the knowledge of things that be, and are done, is not life, but bare time. In the city of Sais, the image of Minerva, which they take to be Isis, had such an inscription over it as this, I am all that which is, has been, and shall be, and never any man yet was able to draw open my veil ±. He frequently condemns the Egyptian idolatry. In so doing, says he, they imprint abfurd and blasphemous opinions of the Gods, tending to atheism and implety, attributing the names of Gods unto natures, and things senseless, lifeless, and corruptible ||: for we must never think that these things be Gods; for nothing can be a God, which has no foul, and is subject to man. In another place he fays, But the Egyptians, at least the common fort of them, worshipping and honouring these very beasts, as if they were Gods, have not only exposed their divine service to ridicule, but there has also crept in an opinion, which has so far possessed the weaker fort as it brings them to meer superstition; and as for those of a better capacity, these it drives headlong into beastly thoughts, and atheistical discourses . This and more to the same purpose hath this learned moral philosopher. Nor do I think it strange: he wrote in the time of the Emperor Trajan, when Christianity had obtained some footing in the world. And tho' Plutarch was a heathen, ^{*} Plutarch. ubi supra, pag. 1300. N.B. I use frequently the Translation of Dr. Holland, printed 1603, which tho' old, yet, in my opinion, in some places expresses the Author's Sense as well as latter Translations. + Plut.ubi sup. pag. 1288.

[#] Plutarch. ubi supra, pag. 1291. || Ibid. pag. 1313.

I know not but he might have read some part of the sacred Scriptures, which long before his time were translated into Greek; and the world then began to be ashamed of some of the absurd and soolish heathen superstitions. So far of the Egyptian idolatry, in imitation whereof Aaron made the Golden Calf in the wilderness, and Jeroboam those in Dan and Bethel, and set them up there as the Gods, who had brought them out of the land of

Egypt. The feaft of the dedication of the Golden Calf is the last thing which I remark concerning it. Moses records, That when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it, and made preclamation, and faid, to-morrow is a feast to the Lord. And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the people fat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play *. 'Tis highly probable, that at this feaft they facrificed after the manner of the Egyptians. Herodote gives an account of a solemn feast, which the people of Egypt celebrated at a place called Bubastis +, in honour of the Goddess Diana. "To her, he fays, they offer many facrifices, " and while the victim is a burning, they dance, and play " a hundred tricks, and drink more wine than in the whole " year beside: for there convene thither about 700000 " men and women, besides children." In another feast of theirs to the Goddess Isis, they used such impure rites, as he did not think lawful to be named. Aaron's feast of the Golden Calf, seems to have been in imitation of this. To the same feast and customs then used, the words of Amos may have a relation ‡, ye have born the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images: it being a custom among the heathen to carry their idols in pomp at their publick feafts, under portable tabernacles, fuch as even in later times they called at Rome Thenfa, Vehicula Decrum, shrines for their Gods. Herodote says |, "They placed a wooden image in a little wooden tem-" ple all gilt over, and this was carried to other facred

^{*} Exod. xxxii. 5,6. + In Euterpe, i. e. lib. 2. cap. 59——62. & cap. 137. ‡ Amos v. 26. || Herod. lib. 2. cap. 63. pag. m. 113.

"places; a few of those who are chosen to minister to the image, drawing a chariot that runs upon four wheels, with the image within it."

I proceed next to the Phenician Idolatry. The Phenicians were among the most ancient nations, and first idolaters. I have spoken concerning their antiquities already*. The only account we have of their theology is by a little fragment preserved by Eusebius +, of the translation that Philo Biblius, in the reign of the Emperor Hadrian, made of Sanckoniathon. Some weighty objections against the authority of this fragment that Mr. Dodwell advances, I have not yet seen answered. But whatever be of its authority, I do not see that the first author thereof can be older than about the reign of Solomon; for he dedicates his book to Abibalus, who we find in Josephus + was the father of Hiram, contemporary with Solomon. But take the fragment as it is, we have there his cosmogony and genealogy. His cosmogony begins thus; " The princi-" ple of the universe is a dark and windy air, or a wind made of dark air, and a turbulent evening chaos. "These things were boundless, and for a long time had " no bound nor figure: but when this wind fell in love " with his own principles, and a mixture was made, that " mixture was called Defire, or Cupid. This mixture " completed, was the beginning of the making of all things: but that wind did not know its own production; " and of this wind was begotten Mot, which some call 66 Mud, others the putrifaction of a watery mixture; " and of this came all the feed of this building, and the " generation of the universe: but there were certain " animals which had no fense, out of which were begot-" ten intelligent animals, and were called Zophesemin, "that is, the spies or contemplators of heaven, and " were formed alike in the fhape of an egg. Thus " shone out of Met the sun, and the moon, the less and "the greater stars." Such, says Eusebius, is the Phenician generation of the world, which bamfhes divinity, and introduces at beism. Those who desire to know the rest of it, may read Eusebius*, and the authors quoted at the foot of the page +, who have handled this subject more fully. For my part, I fee nothing in it, but some scraps stolen out of the Mosaick history of the creation, blended with fuch a heap of fables, as one can fcarce understand them. Sanchoniathon fays, "These things are writ in " the cosmogony of Taautus, and in his memoirs, and out of the conjectures, and supernatural signs, which " his mind faw, and wherewith he has enlightned us." Now, 'tis probable, that this Taautus is Moses, of whom they might have some knowledge in Phenicia, a country fo near Judæa; and that Moses also is the Thoth of the Egyptians, and the Mercurius Trismegistus of the Greeks. It appears by the account we have in Sanchoniathon, that he never so much as mentions God, so far as to name him in making of the world: and therefore, as Eusebius observes, this banishes divinity, and promotes atheism. If he did read the Mofaical books, 'tis plain he believed them not; he has miffed the foundation of all true natural religion, which is love and obedience to God, as the author and supporter of our Being. I come now to take some notice of Sanchoniathon's

^{*} See pag. 100, &c. + De præp. Evang. lib 1. cap 9. 10. ‡ Contra Appionem, lib. 1.

I come now to take some notice of Sanchoniathon's history and genealogy, where he speaks thus: "Of the wind Colpias and his wife Baau, whom the Greeks call Night, were begot two mortals, called Protogonus and Eon; and Eon sound out the way of taking food from trees. Those begotten by them were called Gemus and Genea, and dwelt in Phenicia; but when great droughts came, they stretched their hands up to heaven towards the sun; for him, says he, they thought the only Lord of heaven, calling him Beelsamin.

Afterwards from Genus, the son of Protogonus and Eon, other mortals were begotten, whose names were Light, Fire and Flame. These found out the way of generating sire, by rubbing of pieces of wood against each other, and taught men the use thereof. These ^{*} Loco modò citato.

[†] Jurieu Histoire des Dogmes & des Cultes, from pag. 430 to 447, of French Copy. Dr. Cumberland's Phenician History from the Beginning and rot ward.

begat fons of vast bulk and height, whose names were given to mountains on which they first seized; so from them were named mount Cassius, Libanus, Antilibanus, and Brathys." I need not transcribe the remainder of this obscure narrative; such who are curious may read it in Eusebius and Dr. Cumberland's Phenician history. I shall only observe, that this learned prelate finds in it ten generations, which are those in the line of Cain, contemporary with the ten generations in the line of Seth, recorded in the 5th Chap. of Genesis, viz. in Sanchoniathon thus, 1. Protegonus, whom he makes Adam. 2. Genus, to be Cain. 3. Lux. 4. Cassius. 5. Memrumos. 6. Agreus. 7. Crusor. 8. Technites. 9. Agros. 10. Amnos. The flood ends this line. Then Sydyc, Cabeirci, and the fons of Dioscurus. With these this learned bishop of Peterborough connects Eratosthenes's table of 38 kings in upper Egypt, beginning with Menes or Mifraim, and ending with Amurrhaus. By this means we have a feries of profane history from the first man Adam to the first olympiad, without any difagreement from the facred Scripture. This is a better method of accounting for the long Egyptian Dynasties, than what others have fallen upon to set them in opposition to facred chronology. Eratosthenes, whose series of the Egyptian kings is preserved to us, was the most learned man in his time. He was a native of Cyrene, bordering upon Egypt, Librarian to Ptolemæus Euergetes. He had greater opportunities and helps for fearching the Egyptian records than any person. The priests of Egypt had ever been in a combination to relate extravagant and incredible accounts of their kings, to magnify their antiquity, and aggrandize their monarchy. Eratosthenes went thither with a desire to find out the truth. The names of the 38 first kings of Egypt which he fets down, are a fuccession for the space of 1055 years, and is the most probable account of their monarchy we have upon record, or can now expect when their history is gone, and cannot be recovered.

We have in the same fragment of Sanckoniathon, some hints of the origin of idolatry, in his fifth generation of Memrumos and Hypsuranius. 'Tis said, "He consecra" ted two στῆλαι, ruder stones, or pillars, to fire and "wind, and he bowed down to, or worshipped them, " and poured out to them the blood of fuch wild beafts " as had been caught in hunting. But when these were " dead, fuch as remained, confecrated to them stumps of "wood, and stones, worshipping them, and kept anniversary feasts to them." This, according to Dr. Cumberland's method of explaining the fragment, was before the flood. Afterwards Sanchoniathon adds, " More-" over the God Ouranus devised Betulia, contriving " ftones that moved as having life. But Cronus begat on Aftarte feven daughters, called Titanides or Arte-" medes; and he begat on Rhea feven fons, the youngest " of which, as foon as he was born, was confecrated a "God. Also by Dione he had daughters, and by Astarte " moreover two fons, Pothos and Eros, i.e. Cupid and "Love. But Dagon, after he had found out bread-corn, " and the plough, was called Zevic Arotrius, i. e. Jupiter "the plougher." Dr. Cumberland by long reasoning proves, that Cronus was Cham the son of Noah *. If it be so, this idolatry was soon after the flood: but 'tis difficult to be peremptory, fince Philo Biblius, who translated Sanchoniathon, has committed many mistakes, and given the Phenician names of the Gods, with which the Greeks were unacquainted, in terms more obvious to them. The Titanides, Aftarte, Rhea, Zeus or Jupiter, were terms not known in the Phenician tongue. In the last place I remark in this fragment, Sanchoniathon fays +, That Taautus ascribed a divinity to the nature of the dragon and the serpents, which opinion of his was approved by the Phenicians and Egyptians, because these creatures abound with spirits beyond all reptiles, are of a siery nature, and have a variety of curious crooked motions, and are called by the Phenicians, a good Demon, and by the Egyptians, Cneph.

I proceed now to confider other kinds of idolatry, especially those mentioned in facred Scripture, which were abhorred ^{*} Phenician History, pag. 112, & seqq.

⁺ Apud Euseb. de Præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 9, 10. pag. m. 41.

abhorred of the Lord, and the practice of them forbidden to his people. We find then Israel in the wilderness joined thenselves to Baal-Peor, a God of the Moab tes and Midianites. Thus we read in the book of Numbers *, Israel avode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab. And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their Gods. And the people did eat, and bow down to their Gods. And Ifrael joined bimself unto Baal-Peor: And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel. This idol, which is called by the Septuagint, Beel-Phegor, is mentioned in feveral other texts of Scripture +. To come to understand what this God of the Moabites was, we may lay down this principle, that all the Deities of the Greeks and Romans came from the east, but under different names. Now tis a constant tradition among the ancient and modern Hebrews, that this idol was an obscene Deity, which may plead excuse for not translating some passages concerning it. This opinion of the Jews may be founded upon Hosea ix. 10. They went unto Baal-Peor, and separated themselves to their shame; and other texts in Numbers already quoted. 'Tis the opinion of ferom, who had it from the tradition of the ancient fews, that Beel-Phegor is the Priapus of the Greeks and Romans. ". The Israe-" lites, says be, being brought out of Egypt, did com-" mit fornication with the Midianites, and went to Beel-" Phegor, an idol of the Moabites, which we may call " Priapus. Denique interpretatur Beel-Phegor idolum " tentiginem habens in ore, id est, in summitate pellem, ut " turpitudinem membri virilis ostenderet. And because "they went unto Beel-Phegor, they were alienated from God, to their own confusion ‡." The same sather has a remarkable paffage on the same subject, in his notes on Hoseaiv. 14. I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spouses when they commit adultery ||. He fays, "The Hebrew, Kedeshoth, which A-" quila renders ένηλαζμένων, Symmachus,

^{*} Numb. xxv. 1, 2, 3.

[†] Hosea ix. 10. Pial. cvi. 28. Numb. xxxi. 15, 16.

Hieronymus in Hoseam, cap.ix.ver. 10. operum Tom. 6. fol. 16. Hieronymus in Hoseam, cap.ix.ver. 10. operum Tom. 1. fol. 8.

" whores,— we render effeminate, that we may make the fense of the word plain to people of our language. These are they who are called Galli, not servants to "the mother of Gods, but of devils, who being gelded " in honour of Atys, whom the whorish deity made an " eunuch, the Romans have made their priefts fo. These "Galli were emasculated, to reproach those who took "the city of Rome. Such kind of idolatry was in Ifrael, efpecially among the women, who worshipped Beel-" Phegor, for the greatness of his obscenity, which we " may call Priapus. Hence king Asa took away the high-places, and this fort of priefts, and removed his " mother Maachab from being queen, and took away " the Sodomites, or effeminate, out of the land, and all " the idols that his father had made *. And also he removed his mother, that she might not be priestess in the facrifices of Priapus. He cut down the grove she " had confecrated, and broke her abominable idol, and burnt it at the brook Kedron: but the high-places "were not taken away. ----- We must know, continues be, that Kedeshoth, whores, is the same with ispects, " priests, confecrated to Priapus; and in other places, "Kede/him fignifies these emasculated men: Esaias saying, " καὶ ἐμπαϊκται κατακυριεύουσιν ἀυτῶν, Their deceivers " shall have rule over them; in the Hebrew it is Kedeshim, " and we translate it, Their effeminate persons shall have rule over them." These passages of Jerom are very plain; and if we look to the vulgar Latin, we shall find these texts, 1 King. xv. 13. 2 Chron. xv. 16. thus rendred, as far as I can english them; Also be removed Maachah bis mother, that she might be no longer high-priestess in the facrifices of Priapus; and he destroyed the grove she had consecrated, and broke the most filthy idol, and burnt it at the brook Kedron.—He deposed his mother Maachah from the Empire, because she had made in a grove the image of Priapus, which he broke in pieces, and burnt it at the brook Kedron. I know Mr. Selden is of another opinion, that Baal-Peor is named from the hill Peor, where that idol was worshipped *. But, as Dr. Cumberland, Bishop of Peterborough, observes †, "The true import of the " word Pear, or Baal-Pear, in the Hebrew, is, be that " shows bouftingly or publickly his nakedness; that's void of all modelty, and so a friend to debauchees: That " Origen, Jerom and Philo Judeus, are all of the same " opinion; and shews from Plutarch and Diodorus Si" culus, that the images of Osiris in Egypt, of the goat " at Mendez, of the bull Apis, and of Pan or Faunus, " the Sileni and the Sutyrs, had the same representations " of turpitude." Which should make all persons, who have the least grain of modesty, abhor that abominable idolatry and filthy heathenish superstition, where these things were recommended by the very precepts of their religion, and the patterns of their deities.

^{* 1} Kings xv. 12, 13. 2 Chron. xv. 16.

Concluding then that Baal-Peor, the God of the Moa-bites, is the same with Priapus, 'tis probable that under these names the heathens represented the Patriarch Noah, of whom they might have fome dark notices by tradition. The refemblance is evident; For first, Baal-Peor fignifies a naked mafter or God; which agrees with Noah, who was the father, the mafter and king of mankind, after the flood, and who being drunk with wine, lav uncovered before his children. 'Tis well known the heathens bestowed monstrous naked parts on Priapus‡. This was to represent the generative virtue of Noah, the father of all men. Orpheus, in a hymn made in honour of Priapus, called him προτογονός, and Noab was doubtless the first man of the fecond world. Priatus was looked on as the fource of fruitfulness. Women to avoid being barren, fat upon his filthy image: for which lascivious behaviour toward their God Mutinus, or Priapus, who are the fame, Lastantius | and Augustine  justly deride the heathen. 2 dly, Noab was a hufband-man, a gardener and planter of vineyards. All this agrees with Priarus, who is called by Tibullus, Deus Agricola. 3dly, Priapus was repre-represented with a bosom full of all forts of fruits, and & horn of plenty *. Who but Noah with his skill in hufbandry, began to render the earth fruitful?

^{*} De Diis Syris, pag. m. 163. † Phenician Hist. pag. 67. 69. 73. † Horat. lib. 1. Satyr. 8. Obsemoque ruber perrectus ab inguine palus. | De salsa Religione, lib. 1. cap. 20.  De Civitate Dei, lib. 1. cap. 9. Vоь.` I.

Kemosh the God of the Moabites, is the same with Baal-Peor under another name, as Jerom conceives †: "In "Nabo was the idol Chenosh consecrated, which by ano-"ther name is called Beel-Phegor." This idol of the Moabites is frequently called in sacred Scripture Chemosh or Kemosh. Then did Solomon build an high-place for Kemosh the abomination of Moab ‡. The king Josiah defiled the high-place which Solomon had built for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites ||. Jeremiah fore-telling Moah's destruction, says, Chemosh shall go into captivity, with her priests and princes, and Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh . Nebo was another idol of the Moabites, which some authors also take to be the same with Baal-Peor. Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth: Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba ††.

The Ammonites were brethren of the Moabites, both were the children of Lot, the offspring of the inceftuous copulation with his daughters. The children of Ifrael were polluted with their idolatry; I shall therefore now discourse thereof. The worthip given to Molech, Moloch, or Milchom, the idol of the Ammonites, is frequently mentioned and condemned in Scripture. The law of Moses forbids it. Thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech. Whosever he be, of the children of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourns in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech, shall be surely put to death $\pm$. Solomon went after Ashtoreth, the Goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites. He built an high-place for Chemosh the abomination of Moab, and for Molech the abomination of the children of Ammon, 1 Kin. xi. 5—7.

Josiah defiled Tophet, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molich, 2 King. xxiii. 10. The prophet Jeremiab fays, Twey bave built the highplaces of Tophet, which is in the valley of the jon of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire, which I commanded them not. Therefore behold the days come, faith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet. nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but the valley of flaughter *. The same prophet foretels in the name of the Lord, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. Because they have forfakenme, and have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it unto other Gods. ——And have filled this place with the blood of innocents; they have built also the highplaces of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal +. Achaz burnt incense in the valley of the fon of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathens #. There is another text concerning this kind of idolatry ||, You have born thetabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun, your images, the ftar of your God, which ye made to yourselves. This is cited by Stephen at his martyrdom , where he calls it the star of your God Remphan. I have spoke of this place before ++, to which I now only add, that Dr. Cumberland conceives ##, that Chiun and Raiphas or Remphas, are the names that belong to Cronus, or Cham, who in a few ages after the flood was worshipped by the heathen world. Upon the whole, from all thefe texts it appears, that the Ammonites had an idol called fometimes Molech, Moloch, or Milcom, and even Baal; which last, is a common name to all the idols of the Syrians: that the worship of this idol confisted in making their children to pass through the fire to facrifice, and burn them in his prefence: that the Israelites were polluted with this abomination, and had a place for it in a valley near Jerusalem, called the valley of the fon of Hinnom, or Tophet: and that the good king Josiah destroyed that idol, and made the place a valley of flaughter, for burying carcafes, which was according to the prophecy of the man of God,

1 King. Mil. 1, 2.

A more particular description of this idol we have from Rabbi Simean in his comment on the whole bible, entitled, A Purse: He upon Jer. vii. says*, " All the houses of " idols were in the city of ferufalem, except that of Molech, which was out of the city in a separate place. "Then he afks, how was this idol made? Ans. It was " a statue with an head of an ox, and the hands stretched out as a man's, who opens his hand to receive fome-"thing from another. It was hollow within, and there " were feven chapels raifed, before which the idol was " crected. He that offered a fowl or a young pigeon, "went into the first chapel; if he offered a sheep or a " lamb, he went into the fecond; if a ram, into the "third; if a calf, into the fourth; if a bullock, into "the fifth; if an ox, into the fixth; but he only who " offered his own fon went into the feventh chapel, and " kiffed the idol Molech, as'tis written, Hof. xiii. 2. Let "the men that surifice kiss the calves. The child was " placed before the idol, and a fire made under it, till it " became red-hot. Then the prieft took the child and 66 put him into the glowing hands of Molech; and lest " the parents should hear his cries, they beat drums to " drown the noise. Therefore the place was called To-" thet, from Thoph, Thufpim, that fignifies drums. It was also called Hinnom, because of the childrens roaring, from the Hebrew word Naham, to roar, or be-" cause the priests of Molech said to the parents, Jehene " lab, it will be of advantage to you." Rabbi Behai, on Levil. xviii. 21. fays, The benefit resulting from the sacrifice, was the preservation of their other children, and that their own lives should be happy; at least the priests told them for. Some conceive Hinnom, the name of the place, is derived from fome private person to whom the ground formerly belonged. The reft of Rabbi Simeon's commentary is probable, and confonant to texts already cited, ^{*} Apud Jurieu Hift. des dogmes & des cultes, pag. 566.

cited, and to Pal. cvi. 37. They facrificed their sons and daughters unto devils.

The fame idol was worshipped by the Greeks and Romans, under the name of Saturn, and by the Gauls and Germans under that of Teutates. We have convincing testimonies, that these and other Gentiles offered human facrifices, which I shall a little insist upon to illustrate the abominations of heathenism, and to shew how great a mercy we enjoy, in being delivered from them by the light of the Gospel. Varro, cited by Macrobius, informs us, "That the Pelasgians being scattered from their own " country, and not knowing where to go, were by the oracle ordered to repair to Italy, where they erected 44 a temple to Pluto, and an altar to Saturn, whose feast "they called Saturnalia, and there for a long time they " believed that they appeared Pluto by mens heads, and 66 Saturn by human facrifices, because of the oracle to " which they trusted . But Hercules, 'tis said, coming 44 through Italy, fome time after this, with Geryon's cat-"tle, perfunded their posterity to exchange these un-" lucky for more lucky facrifices, to offer to Pluto ima-" ges of a human shape, and lights unto Saturn, because φωτα fignifies not only a man, but also light." It appears from Cicero, that the Gauls retain'd this abominable custom; Can any thing, fays he +, be holy and religious to these people, who whenever they apprehend any danger, and think the Gods must be appealed, they tollute their temples and ollars with human socistices? Any Religion they have, they defile with wickedness; for who is ignorant, that to this very day they retain the barbarous custom of facrificing men, hominum immolandorum? Lactantius assures us !!, That the Gauls appease Hesus and Teutates with the blood of men; and gives feveral other instances of fuch barbarity practifed by the Heathens, particularly, "That at Scham's in Cyprus, Teuerus offered a human " victim, and ordered his porterity to do the like, which, ^{} Macrobii Saturnalia lib. 1. cap. 7. pag. m. 275, 276. Kal ຂອງຂາລີຣ "Aວີທູ ນີ ເພື່ອເປີຍໄ ຕຣັບກອເຮ ຊຸພັເລ.

|| De falfa Religione, lib. 1. pag m. 35, 87.

[†] Oratio pro M. Fontejo, operum pag. m. 383.

" fays he, was lately taken away by the Emperor Ha-" drian; that there was a law among the people of Tau-" rus to facrifice their guests to Diana, which was long " observed Neither are the Latins free of it, for " Jupiter Latialis even to this day (that is, to our au-"thor's time, the third century) is adored with human " blood." The fame author fays, " That the Cartha-" ginians offered human victims to Saturn; that when "they were vanquished by Agarheeles king of Sicily, they " conceiving that their God was angry with them, to ap-66 peafe him the better, they facrificed to him at once "two hundred fons of noblemen #." These are facrifices to devils! Plato in his dialogue Minos, fays, the Carthaginians facrificed their children to Saturn. 'Tis probable that they learned this of the Phenicians and Tyrians, of whom Carthage was a colony.

The account Plutarch gives of these facrifices of the Carthaginians, in his book of Superstition*, is very conformable to what has been already faid of the worship of Molech. He informs us, "That those who had no iffue of their own to make a victim of, bought poor people's 66 children, as we buy lambs, calves, or young kids in " the market: At which facrifice the mother that bare 66 them in her womb, must stand by, without weeping " or fighing for pity and compassion; for if she sighed " or fhed a tear, fhe must lose the price of her child, "tho' actually flain and facrificed. Moreover, before cand about the image or idol to which the facrifice was 66 made, the place refounded with the noise of flutes, 66 hautboys, drums, and timbrels, that the pitiful cry of the poor infants might not be heard." He adds, If " any Typhen, or other fuch-like giant, having chaced out " the Gods, should usurp the empire of the world, what " other facrifices would they delight in, or what other " offerings and fervice could they require at mens hands? " Amestris, the wife of the great monarch Aeixes, buried " alive in the ground twelve persons, and offered them " for prolonging of her own life, unto Pluto, who, as Plato fays, was named Pluto, Dis, Hades." Diodorus Siculus

Siculus allo informs us of the horrid facrifice made by the Carthaginians of two hundred noble children at once, to appeale Saturn (+), and three hundred more who were obnoxious for crimes; and in the fame place tells what the statue of Saturn was, "That it was a brazen " fratue stretching its hands toward the ground, fo as "the child being laid upon it, fell into a gulph of hot " fire." What can be more like Moloch than this? Ludovicus Vives also reports, "That in his time the Spa-" niards discovered an island in America, which they " called Carolina, where they found great brazen sta-"tues, hollow within, with the hands joined and 46 stretched, in which the children were placed, who "were facrificed to their idols, and cruelly burnt alive " with a great fire under the brazen statue (||)." 'Tis not improbable that this way of worship spread itself from Carthage along the coast of Afric, and thence was afterward transmitted to the opposite shore of America. We shall hear more afterwards of these inhuman facrifices in Mexico and Peru, when we come to the feventh chapter of this book. Wherever Satan reigns, he is a devouring lion. Mean time I shall add, that Lucian owns, that the Scythians facrifice their guests *; and Lucan + and Silius Italicus || confess the same of them and the Carthaginians, as in the verses quoted at the bottom of this page. Plutarch, in his life of Themistocles, owns, that the Greeks or Athenians, before the battle at Salamis, facrificed three young beautiful prisoners, array'd in gold and jewels, to Bacchus, furnamed Omestes, that is, Cruel; being directed to do fo by the footh-fayer. From this horrid

Et quibus immitis placatur sunguine diro Teutates, horrensque feris altaribus Hesus; Et Taranis Scythica non mitior ara Diana.

|| Silius Italicus, lib. 4. ver. 767.

Mos fuit in populis, quos condidit advena Dido, Poscere cade Deos veniam, ac slagrantibus aris (Infandum dictu!) parvos imponere natos.

^(†) Bibl. Hist. lib. 20. cap. 14. pag. m. 1065.

^(||) In notisad Augustinum de civitate Dei, lib. 20. cap. 19. * Luciani opera, tom. 1. pag. 212. & περί δυσίως, ibid. pag. 369.

⁺ Lucani Pharfalia, lib. 1. ver. 444.

horrid custom of facrificing children, rose the fable of the poets, of Saturn's devouring his own children, as Diodorus Siculus observes*.

I might produce many other testimonies from the primitive fathers, against the Gentiles, concerning this barbarous custom; but I shall only defire the reader, who inclines to be acquainted with these affairs, to look into Eulebius +, who, after he has lamented the fad condition of those barbarous times, when the devil, whom they worshipped, perfuaded the father to facrifice his beloved fon, the mother her pretty little daughter, he produces from the books of Porphyry, a fworn enemy to Christianity, many pregnant examples of these cruel facrisces; as, that the Rhodians, on the 6th day of July, facrificed a man to Saturn; that at the city of Salamis the like Sacrifice was performed in March, which custom Diphilus took away. The like barbarity was used at Heliopolis in Egypt, where they offered three men in one day; but Amosis their king substituted three images made of wax. This custom also prevailed in the isles of Chies and Tenedos; the facrifice being there performed to Bacchus Omadius, and at Lacedamon to Mars. In Phenicia it was their ordinary practice, when war, famine, or any calamity raged, to offer human facrifices, of which the history of Sanchoniathon, translated by Philo-Biolius, says our author, is full. But I am weary of these instances. Befide what I have above advanced, the curious may find plain documents of too too many of them in Eu/\hat{e} bius, I.c. from authors which are now loft. What an invaluable mercy is it then, that the glorious Gospel has delivered us from this barbarous, monstrous inhumanity, and directed us to worship our gracious and merciful God, who made heaven and earth, and is reconciled to us by the death of his fon? Who doth not command us to come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old; nor with thousands of rams, nor ten thousands of rivers of oil; nor to give our first-los n for our transgression, the fruit of our body for the fin of cur joul: but requires of thee, ^{*} Loco fupra citato.

⁺ De Prap. Evang. lib. 4. cap. 5-18.

thee, O man, to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God *.

One thing further I shall remark, as to that passage of Eulebius+, where, from Philo-Biblius's Translation of Sanchoniathon, he tells us, "That those who were ap-" pointed to be facrificed, were flain with mystical Ce" remonies: for Keóvos or Saturn, called Israel by the " Pheniciaus, whom they confecrated and worshipped " after his death, under the star of that name, reigning " in these parts, had one fon by a nymph called Ano-" bret, whom he named Jebud, which fignifies only-" begotten; a dangerous war breaking out in that Coun-" try, he facrificed that only fon upon an altar made by " himself." It hath been afferted by the learned Bochart and others, that this story, tho' difguised, relates to Abraham's defigned facrifice of Isaac. But Dr. Cumberland is of another opinion ||, that Chronos is Cham the fon of Noab; that this passage cannot be applied to Abraham and Isaac, fince the time and persons altogether differ. To be fure that action of Abraham can never be any cloak for these barbarous facrifices; for Abraham had God's express command, and was affured, that if Islac had then died, he would have rifen again, for the promife faid, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called, Heb. xi. 17-20. And God, to shew even at that time, that he calls no man to offer the fruit of his body for the fin of his foul, fent an angel from heaven, calling to Abraham, Lay not thine hand upon the lad. But Dr. Cumberland conceives this passage in Eusebius is to be applied to Cham, who had learned Idolatry from fome of the old wicked world before the flood, and practifed the fame foon after it; and from him it was transmitted to Canaan, to E_{gypt} , and to the rest of his dominions. If it be so, the origin of these barbarous customs is very ancient; but nothing the better, being plainly contrary to the very Noachic precepts, Gen. ix. 6. Whoso shedd the man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; most opposite to the law of nature, to the whole current of the facred Scriptures, and a terrible instance of the ^{*} Micah vi. 6—8. † De Præp. Evang. lib. 4. cap. 16. pag. m. 156. | Phenician History, pag. 134, & feqq.

the degeneracy of men, when they go to that height of unnatural cruelty, as to facrifice their fons and their daughters to devils *.

Adramelech and Hanamelech, the Gods of + Sepharvaim, are the fame with Molech, to whom the Sepharvaites burnt their children in the fire. Adar and Hana are but additional furnames to Molech: Adar fignifies magnificent, and Hana, to bear. Hence Adramelech is a magnificent and mighty king; Hanamelech a king that will hear fuch as call upon him. With fuch epithets the Gentiles profanely honoured their cruel idols.

I come now to confider the idolatry ascribed to Baal. Concerning it, I shall offer the following remarks. First, 'Tis frequently mentioned in the holy Scripture: Balak took Balaam, and brought bim up to the high places of Baal ||. Gideon cast down the altar of Baal, and cut down the grove that was by it. The men of the city being difpleased, threatned Gideon with death. But Joash his father said, Will ye pleas for Baal? will ye save him? If he be a God, let him plead for himself; and he called his fon Jerubbaal, faying t, let Baal plead against bim. In the History of Abab, we find be took to wife Jezabel the daughter of Ethbaal King of the Zidonians, and went and forved Baal, and worshipped Im; and reared up an altar for Baal, in the bouse of Baal, in Samaria . We have also the admirable trial between Elijah and the prophets of Baal, to know who was the true God, who should answer by fire: the priests of Baal, to the number of 450, dreffed the facrifice, leapt on the altar, cried with a loud voice, O Baal hear us, and cut themselves after their manner; but there was no voice, nor any to answer. But God immediately answered Elijab by fire, whereupon the priests of Baal were put to death ++. The same prophet complains that among the ten Tribes, he only was left to be a witness against this idolatry: But the Lord tells him, ^{*} Pfal. cvi. 37. 1 Cor. x. 20. + 2 Kings xvii. 31. || Numb. xxii. 41. + Judges vi. 25—32.  1 Kings xvi. 30—32. + 1 Kings xviii.

I have left me feven thousand in Israel, all the knees that have not bowed to Baal, and every mouth which has not kissed him *. Jehu destroyed the temple of Baal and his images, killed his priests, brake down his house, and made it a draught-house †. Judah was desiled with this kind of idolatry in the government of Athaliah; but Joash, by direction of Jehoiada, destroyed that idol ||. In the reign of Manasseh it was restored: but good King Josiah put down them that burnt incense to Baal, to the sun, to the moon, to the planets, and to all the host of heaven ‡.

Secondly, I remark, that the Scripture has often Ba-alim, in the plural number, as Judges ii. 11. and iii. 7. 1 Sam. xii. 10. and in other texts, which is an evidence, that there were many idol-deities fo called.

Thirdly, Baal, by the Septuagint, is represented also as a Goddess, the word Baal being frequently constructed with a seminine article, as I Sam. vii. 4. The same of the Baak, they destroyed the images of the Goddess Baal, fer. ii. 28. Eduou the Baak, they sacrificed to the Goddess Baal; and in other places, marked at the foot of the page : Tho' its to be observed, that in the Hebrew text Baal is always masculine. In the fragment of Sanchoniathon, preserved by Eusebius, we find mention is made of the Goddess Baaltis, otherwise called Diana, the town of Byblus.

Fourthly, The name Baal which fignifies Lord, Master or Husband, spread itself far and near. It seems to have its original from Phenicia, Jezabel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, coming into the house of Abab, brought this ided with her from the city Zidon, were he was the chief God of Tyre and Zidon, and was well known allover Asia. 'Tis the same with Bel of the Bab lonians often mentioned by the prophets in the Old-Testament $\ddot\frac{1}{2}$. The same name, and the same ided-deity went

Ifa. xlvi. 1. Jer. l. 2. and li. 44.

^{* 1} Kings xix. 15—18 † 2 Kings x. 25—28. || 2 Kings xi. 18. ‡ Compare 2 Kings xxi. 3. with 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 5.

^{} Jer. xi. 13. xix. 5. and xxxii. 35. Hofea ii. 8. †† De præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 10. pag. m. 38. ad finem.

went to the Carthaginians, who were a Colony of the Phenicians; as appears by the names of Hannibal, Afdrubal, Adbrbal, and others of that kind, all confifting of or derived from Belor Baal, being the name of the Deity of the country, which was according to the custom of the East, where the kings and great men of the realm had the name of their Gods. Thus Daniel in Babylon was called Belieshazzar, that is, the treasurer of the God Bel; Hananiah was called Shadrach, that is, a fweet $D_{\mathcal{C}}$ mon; and Michael, Mefhach, from the Goddess Serab; and Azariab, Abednego, or fervant of Nego, another Babylonish deity. Other examples of this kind are given by Jurieu*. It feems that the name of this idol was given to many towns and villages in Canaan, as Baalab, Josh. xv. 9. Baal-Hermon, 1 Chron. xv. 23. Baal-Gad, Josh. xi. 17. Baal-Mon, Numb. xxxii. 38. Baal-Perazim, 2 Sain. v. 20. Baal-Schalischa, 2 Kings iv. 42. and Baal-Tamar, Judge xx. 33. But 'tis certain that most of these places had these names long before Jezabel made the idol-worship of Baal so universal among the ten tribes. This God also passed into Gaul, where he was known by the name of Belenus; their principal deities being Teutates, Hesus, Taranis and Belenus. He went also into Italy with the Gauls, who settled there. He was the God of Aquileia, till the fall of the empire. Julius Caritolinus fays +, That Maximinus, when befreging Aquileia, sent ambassadors persuading the people to surrender, to robich they had almost consented; but Menophilus and his Collegue Crispinus opposed it, saying the God Belenus bad promised by his Sooth-sayers, that Maximinus should be varquished. Herodian says ‡, The natives of the country call this God Belis; they worship him with great devotion, and take him for Apollo. Gruterus finds at Aqui'eia some ancient inscriptions, Apollini Beleno. 'Tis probable the Roman emperor called Eliogabalus, took his name, to fignify that he was a prieft of Baal.

Fifthly,

^{*} Hist. des Dogmes, pag. 595. + In Maximinis inter Hist. Augustæ scriptores, pag. m. 239.

[±] Lib. S. pag. m. 375.

Fifthly, Let us confider how Beal was ferved. Paffing the temples, altars, facrifices, invocations and genuflexions to him, (these being common services to all the Pagan deities) there are fome things peculiar to the honour of this idol. Children were facrificed to him. The prophet Jeremiah, xix. 5. upbraids Ifrael for this; They have built the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it; neither came it into my mind. This Baal is the fame with Molech of the Ammonites, of whom I have before discoursed. The priests of Baal leaped upon his altar, I Kings xviii. This was usual in the service of the idols of the nations, The people fut down to eat and drink, and rose up to play, Exod. xxxii. 6. The priests of Mars and Cybele were called Salii, à Saliando, from dancing. The flute, trumpet, and other mufical inftruments, were used to lead and animate the dance, as we find in Ovid*. Another ceremony in the worship of Baal was, that the priefts cut themselves with knives and launces, and covered themselves with their own blood, Jeremiab takes notice of this furious superstition, but speaks of it as a ceremony practifed in mourning for the dead; Men shall not lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them, Jer. xvi. 6. This was forbidden by the law, Ye shall not cut your selves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead, Deut. xiv. 1. Levit. xix. 28. But the priests of Baal, when offering facrifices, cut themselves after their manner with knives and launces, till the blood gushed out upon them, I Kings xviii. 28. and 'tis certain these bloody incisions were made to the heathen deities. Among the Romans both Seneca † and Lucan ± take notice of it. The last coremony I observe in

* Lib. 1. de Ponto. Epist. 1. ver. 39.

Ante Deûmmatrem cornutibicen adunco

Cum canit; exigue quis slipis ara neget?

† Seneca in Medea, Aft. 4. Seen. 2. ver. 808.

Pettore Manus facro feriam Brachia cuitro.

‡ Lucani Pharfalia, lib. 1, ver. 565.
——Tum, quos fectis Bellona iacertis
Sava movet, cecinere Deos: crinemque rotantes Enguinei populis ulularunt triftia Galli.

in the worship of Baal, is kissing; Yet have I left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed to Baal, and every mouth which bath not kiffed him; I Kings xix. 18. 'Tis not worthy a debate whether they kiffed the idol or their hand, to do homage to him; 'tis plain they used this as a posture of respect and adoration. These were the principal ceremonies used in the service of Baal, which were not so peculiar to him, as that they were not used to any other idol of the nations, but were done to shew their special regard to him, as one of their chief Deities.

In the fixth place, it may be remarked, that this Baal of the Syrians, Tyrians and Zidonians is the Zevic of the Greeks, and Jupiter of the Latins; by whom, according to Macrobius, is to be understood the Sun. Jupiter bimself, says he*, does not exceed the nature of the sun.—
He is carried in a winged chariot, to shew the swiftness of that star. In whatever sign he be, he goes before all the rest of the stars, leading and ordering all these deities. His image is of gold, the metal and colour of the fun. He is beardless, because the sun is ever young. He has a whip in his hand; for the sun is said to have a chariot and horses, and consequently a whip. In his left hand he holds a thunder-bolt and sheaves; the first for Jupiter, and the last for the Sun. All which are arguments that they are one and the fame deity. Macrobius, who finds the fun almost in every one of the heathenidols, could not miss him here. It were easy also to find out men concealed under the names of Barl and Jupiter. The bishop of Peterborough says +, Where Baal is set alone, and no circumstances determine it to another deity, I generally take Cronus to be understood; that is, according to his notion, Cham the fon of Noah, who indeed was the great promoter of idolatry after the flood; and from him many nations in Canaan, Egypt and other parts did spring, who'tis probable at these times did pay honour to him as to a deity. As to Jupiter, there are a vast number of deities of that name. Cicero fays +, Their divines number three of them, two born in Arcadia; one, whose father was Æther, who begat Proserpina and Liber; another begotten by Cælus the father of Minerva, the inventress of war; the third Jupiter was of Crete, the son of Saturn, and is buried in that island. Here I conceive are more than three: but Tertullian *, from Varro, reckons no less than 300 Jupiters; so does Lilius Geraldus †. Jupiter Hammon is as ancient as any of these. He was worshipped in Egypt and Lybia. His name seems to be derived from Ham the son of Noah, the father of idolatry.

^{*} Macrobii Saturnalia, lib. 1. cap. 23. † Phenician History, pag. 152. † De natura Deorum, lib. 3. 8. 53.

Seventhly, There are several epithets given to Bual. Of Baal-Peor we have already discoursed. Baal-Zephon, Exod. xiv. 2, 9. was only the name of a place, or, in the opinion of some Jews, a magick figure, not a diftinct Deity. Baal-Berith is mentioned in Judg. viii. 33. As soon as Gideon was dead, the children of Israel went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baal-Berith their God, The men of Shechem took seventy pieces of silver out of the bouse of Baal-Berith, with which Abimelech bired vain. persons who followed him, Judg. ix. 4. Berith signifies the covenant or alliance; so Baal-Berith may be interpreted, The God of the covenant. Thus, among the Greeks and Romans, there was a Jupiter Fæderalis. Dr. Cumberland is of opinion +, that Baal-Berith doth fignify Cronus or Cham, worshipped anciently at Berytis. Monfieur Jurieu conceives ||, that this deity is a Goddess of the Phenicians, fince the Helrew terminations Ith and Uth are always feminine, especially in proper names. 'Tis true this idol is called Elohim-Baal in the book of Judges, which are nouns of the masculine gender: but the reason is obvious, the Hebrews have no name that fignifies a Godder's, because they own no fex in the deity. He is then of opinion that Baal-Berith is the same with the Goddess Cybele of the Greeks and Romans, the very Syrian Goddess of which Lucian writes, saying , There was ^{*} Apolog cap. 14. operum pag.m. 31.

[†] Lilius Geraldus, Hist. Deorum syntagma 2. pag. m. 73.

⁺ Phenician Hist. pag. 152. | Hist des Dogmes, &c. pag. 619.

Be Dea Syra, operum Tem. 2.

was nothing more magnificent than her temple. Beside the rich workmanship, and the vast offerings in it, there were some marks of a present deity. The statues were seen to sweat, move, and pronounce oracles. A noise was often beard there when the doors were shut. He tells also how amazing the concourse was of those who went to pay their devotions at her folemnities. He fays, her statue is set in a chariot drawn by lions; she holds a drum in her hand, and her head is dressed with towers, as the Lydians paint her. Cybele may be known by all these tokens. To which we may add, that the priefts of the Syrian Goddess were emasculated, and wore women's habit, having no other bufiness than women's; that in her folemn feafts men, out of respect to her, feized with fury, at the found of the drum, cut off their genitals, and ran naked over the town, holding the difmembred parts in their hand; and the first house into which they threw them, was to find them a woman's fuit of clothes. This was done to the honour of the Goddess, who emasculated Atys. Lucian owns he heard a credible person say, that the temple of the Syrian Goddess was confecrated to Rhea or Cybele by Atys, who first taught men her mysteries; and that what the Phrygians or Samothracians knew of them, came from a Lydian. After Rhea had made Atys an eunuch, he led a woman's life, took on a woman's habit, and in this condition rambled about the world, divulging her mysteries. When he came to Syria, perceiving the people beyond it would not receive him, he stopt there, and built a temple to the Goddess. Cybele is faid by Mythologists * to have been the wife of Saturn; she was called Dindymone, Berycinthia, and Ops by the Latins, and by the Greeks, Rhea. She was wont to ride in a chariot drawn by lions; her folemn festivals called Megalesia, were every fourth month, at which time the Corybantes, who were her priests, did act the part of madmen, with their drums, trumpets, and other instruments. The Gauls, who planted themfelves in Phrygia on these days, moved so, as by degrees they became really mad, flriking one another with fwords and other weapons; yea, many times they grievously wounded

^{*} See Galtruchius's Hist. of the Heathen Gods, pag. 8.

Chap.2. Of Baalmeon and Baalzebub.

193

wounded themselves; and at the end of this diversion they washed their bodies and wounds in some river dedicated to the Goddess. Monsieur Jurieu conceives *, That by this Goddess the heathens meant the earth and her generative virtue; but for my part I love not to insist on meer conjectures. There are many things in this and other sables contrived by the devil, and delivered by the poets to reproach virtue, and to cause vice to reign with authority among men.

Dr. Cumberland † finds another idol in Baalmeon, mentioned Numb. xxxii. 38. 1 Chron. v. 8. Ezek. xxv. 9. Jer. xlviii. 23. Jos. xiii. 17. where 'tis called Beth-Baalmeon, the house of Baalmeon, which he takes to be an idol for Menes, or Misraim the son of Ham, the first deisted king of Egypt, the termination only being changed.

There is yet another Baal, mentioned both in the Old and New-Testament, I mean Baalzebub, or, as the Greeks spell it, Beelzebul. We find him named 2 Kings i. 2, 3. Ahaziah fell down through a lattes in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick; and he fent messengers, saying, Go enquire of Baalzebub, the God of Ekron, whether I shall recover of this disease? Which messengers being met by Elijah, he said to them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel that ye go to enquire of Baalzebub the God of Ekron? This is that Baalzebub so often named by the Evangelists, Matth. xii. 24. When the Pharisees heard it, they said, this fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. See also Matth. x. 25. Chap. xii. 27. Mark iii. 22. Luke xi. 15, 18, 19. There are several opinions of learned men concerning this Baalzebub: some explain it thus, Zebub, in the Hebrew language, signifies a slie; Baalzebub, the God slie. Others derive it from Beelzebul, the God of dung, and conceive this name to be given him by the Jews in derision. But since in the New-Testament he is called the prince of devils, I consess Monsieur Jurieu's notion pleases me, that he is the same with the Pluto of the Greeks and Romans,

^{*} Hist. des Dogmes, pag. 625. † Phenician Hist. pag. 61-64. † Histoire des Dogmes, &c. p. 631. O

mans, the prince of the infernal Gods. He cannot be their Baal or Jupiter, whom they account a heavenly and benign deity; but must be Pluto, a malignant and mischievous one, under whom are Proserpina, the Furies, the Harpies, the Larvæ and Lemures, mentioned both by the heathen poets and philosophers, as a prince over all these wicked spirits. Upon this principle, that Pluto teaches the way to expel all evil spirits, the Jews accuse our Saviour of casting out devils by the prince of the devils. The title that's given to Baalzebub the God of Accaron, is very like the name of Acheron given to Pluto by the poets; which Acheron, they call a river in hell, not far from Pluto's palace. The name Baal being put before Zebub, does not hinder Pluto from being known by that name, Baal being a general title given to all the Gods. Tho' Jupiter be sometimes meant by Baal, yet the Greeks and Romans gave to Pluto also the name of Jupiter, as is plain from Virgil +. The name of Baalzebub, God of flies, and of Serapis, prince of locusts, may be ascribed to Pluto, because the flies and locusts were two of the greatest plagues of the South and East countries of Asia and Afric: clouds of locusts fly together, cross these regions, and leave nothing green behind them. They fly with fuch violence and fwiftness, that in a moment they devour whole provinces. Pliny ‡ describes them as one of the plagues inflicted by the wrath of the Gods, and as very terrible in Cyrene. Now the heathens accounted Pluto the author and mafter of these plagues; and therefore worshipped him to keep them from harm. I cannot positively affirm what the heathens understood by Pluto. Some conceive, that as Cybele and Ceres fignifies the furface of the earth bearing crops, and yielding fruits; fothis deity fignifies the virtue diffu-fed in the bowels of the earth, which agrees to what is faid by Cicero ||, The power and virtue of the earth and nature, is dedicated to Pluto. Jurieu fays , I know not whether in Pluto's fable concerning the rape of Proserpina, and her return into hell, there may not be something of the rape of Dinah by Shechem the son of Hamor, who uponit was sent with all his subjects into hell by Jacob's sons, who put them all to the sword. But I leave this as a meer conjecture.

 Hift. des Dogmes, &c. pag. 645.

[†] Aneid. 4. Lin. 638. Sacra Jovi, Stygio, qua rite incepta paravi. ‡ Hist. Natur. lib. 11. cap. 29. || De Natura Deorum, l. 2. §. 66. Terrena autem vis atque natura Diti patri dedicata est.

Another Deity of the Phenicians and Syrians is Dagon. the God of Ashdod, a city of the Philistines, called by the Greeks Azotos. We hear of this idol in the book of Judges, Chap. xvi. 23. The Lords of the Philistines gateered themselves together for to offer a great sacrifice to Dagon their God; and they said, our God has delivered Samion our enemy into our hand. And in I Sam. v. 2-5. The Philistines took the ark of God, and brought it into the house of Dagon, and fet it by Dagon. When they of Ashdod rose early on the morrow, behold Dagon was fallen on his face to the earth before the ark of the Lord; and the head of Dagon, and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threshold, only the stump of Dagon was left to bim. When Israel was defeated in the latter end of Saul's reign, that Prince killed himself, lest he should fall alive into the hands of the Philistines; and on the morrow, when the Philistines had stripped him, they put his armour in the house of their Gods, and fastned his head in the temple of Dagon, I Chron. x. 4-8-10. This temple continued till the time of the Maccabees: for the author of the first book says *, That Jonathan having defeated the army of Apollonius, General to Demetrius, they fled to Ashdod, and took fanctuary in Bnθδανών, the house of Dagon their idol; but Jonathan set Ashdod on fire, and burnt the temple of Dagon, and all that were fled thither. Some derive the word Dagon from Dag a fish, others from Dagan, which fignifies corn or wheat. Thus Philo Biblius, who translated Sanchoniathon, fays, Cælus married his fister Ge+, and had by her four sons; Ilus, who is called Cronus, Betylus, and Dagon, of soli Σιτών, who is Siton, or the God of corn. And a little after he adds, But Dagon, after he had found out bread-† Apud Euseb. de Præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 10.

^{* 1} Maccabees, chap. 10. ver. 82-85. chap, 11. ver. 4.

corn, and the plough, was called Zευς αροτρίος, Jupiter the Plougher. But the authority of this imperfect fragment, of which we have already discoursed, is not so great as to determine us in this affair. We rather incline to think that Dagon comes from Dag, a fish. This is agreeable to the account the Jews give of him. R. David Kimchi fays , Dagon from the navel downwards had the shape of a fish, and therefore was called Dagon; and from the navel upwards a man's shape, and the falms of his hands were cut off, as'tis written, upon the threshold. This is the interpretation of what is faid in the facred text, Dagon was left alone; that is, he had nothing but the shape of a fish remaining. This Dagon then seems to be the Neptune of the Greeks and Romans. We have already afferted that the heathen deities in the Western parts of the world came from the East. We have found Saturn in Moloch, Jupiter in Baal, Pluto in Beelzebub; and now we find Neptune in their Dagon. It was one part of the monstrous idolatry of the gentile world, who wanted the invaluable privilege of divine revelation, that they worshipped fishes, as appears by the most eminent profane writers. Cicero fays +, The Syrians worship a fish. Xenophon speaking of the river Calus, says t, That it was full of great tame fishes, which the Syrians worshipped as Gods, and would not suffer any burt to be done either to them or pigeons. And to come nearer our purpose, we find from Diodorus Siculus ||, " That at the city Ascalon " in Syria, or not far from it, there is a great deep lake " abounding in plenty of fish; and in the neighbour-" hood thereof there is a temple of the Goddess, called " by the Syrians, Derceto, who has the face of a woman, " and the rest of her body like a fish; for which this " reason is given by the most sensible men of the country, " that Venus having a spleen against the Goddess, caused "her to fall in love with a handsome young man in Sy"ria, one of those who sacrificed. She conceived a daughter by him, and was ashamed of the fact, and ^{} Kimchi in 1 Sam. v. 2. Apud Jurieu Hist. des Dogmes, pag. 645.

† De natura Deorum, lib. 3. §. 39. Piscem Syri venerantur.
‡ De expeditione Cyri. || Bibl. hist. lib. 2. cap. 4. p. m. 89, 90.

" therefore killed the young man, and exposed the "girl, when brought into the world, in a rocky defart; "and, for grief, precipitated herself into the lake, where she was transformed into a fish. Therefore " the Syrians to this day, fays be, abstain from that "kind of creature, and worship the fishes as Gods." Lucian fays*, "I have feen the image of Derceto in " Phenicia, an unusual fight, it was half a woman, and " from the knees down to the feet, like the tail of a fish." All this makes our opinion more probable; for the Dagon be a male, yet nothing hinders but there might be two deities, one male, and the other female worshipped in the same country, under the same shape of a man and a fish. As to what is further fignified or hid under the names of Dagon and Neptune, Jurieu + conceives 'tis the fea, and the spirit by which that element is ruled, the cause of so many different motions and generations. And as to Animal-Gods, he takes Dagon for Japhet, because the share of his partition, and that of his posterity, was in the isles and lands beyond the sea, that is in Europe.

Having explained the chief heathen Gods of Palestine. fomething may be faid of others that defiled the holy land; tho' little certainty can be had about them, but only their names. These are the false deities which were brought into Samaria, after Shalmanezer carried the ten tribes captive, 2 King. xvii. 24, 29, 30, 31. And the king of Affyria brought men from Babylon, from Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, instead of the children of Israel. Every nation made Gods of their own. And the men of Babylon made Succoth-Benoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, and the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvaites burnt their children in fire to Adramelech, and Anammelech, the Gods of Sepharvaim. We have discoursed of these two last already, as the same with Molech. As to the rest of those impious deities, which they put in the houses of the high-places, which the Samaritans had made, made, I begin with Nergal, which may be derived from Nir, Fire or Light, and Galal, to move; fo that it fignifies a shining or moving light. Thus 'tis not hard to guess, that the sun is meant by this Nergal, which the men of Cutha worshipped, as the Persians generally did. As to Ashima, the idol of the men of Hamath, some conceive it to be a rural deity, as Pan and the Satyrs, the deities of the woods represented with sharp-pointed ears and goats feet. But the learned Peter Jurieu thinks * it may be derived from Esh-Maja, the fire of heaven, or Esh-Joma, a daily fire: all which signifies the sun, of which the fire is an emblem; and 'tis well known that the fun and fire were the idols of those countries, from which these men had been removed. The Avians made Nibbaz and Tartak. The Rabbins fay, The first of these is a dog briskly barking. But the' the Egyptians worshipped that creature, there is no evidence that the Assyrians did it. Monf. Jurieu + then derives the name of this idol from Nipchaz, to leap, run, or make haste; a proper Epithet for the sun, which both the Chaldeans and Persians worshipped above all, and almost in all their idols, which ought to turn our conjecture on that fide. Tartak is the other idol of Ava, which Jurieu inclines to derive from Rathak, a Chariot. If Tartak can be derived from it, one might fay, that it fignifies the fun mounted in a Chariot.

^{*} De Dea Syra, operum Tom. 2. pag. 651. † Hist. des Dogmes & des Cultes, pag. 651.

We are almost as much in the dark as to Nifroch. He was the God of that Senacherib who so profanely insulted Hezekiah for trusting in God Almighty: but the Lord fighting for the Jews, by his angel, destroyed in one night 185000 of his army, which forced him to a precipitate and disorderly retreat. The facred text, 2 Kings xix. 36, 37. says, He returned and dwelt at Nineveh. And it came to pass as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his God, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword. I have already proved $\frac{1}{2}$, that Herodote gives an account of this defeat of Senacherib, tho' his relation be much disguised, and touches some ^{*} Ubi supra. + Ubi supra, pag. 657.

‡ See Chap. 1. pag. 126.

other matters of fact mentioned in facred Scipture. To return to Nifroch, the word Nifra fignifies a young eagle ||. This makes it probable that Jupiter Belus was worshipped by the Affyrians, under the figure of an Eagle, and by the name of Nifroch.

There is yet a female Deity. The men of Babylon made Succoth-Benoth, which properly signifies the taber-nacle of daughters*; Benoth or Venoth, and Venus have a great affinity, the initial letter being eafily interchanged. And if we look into the Rites whereby this Babylonian Venus was served, we may find them in Herodote. fays +, "There is an abominable custom among the "Babylonians, that all their women are obliged once in " their life to become proftitutes to strangers at the temof ple of Venus. Such as are rich, and will not expose them-" felves, keep before the temple of the Goddess in their " chariots, under arches, with their domesticks behind But the greatest part sit in the temple of Venus, their heads being crowned with nofegays and " garlands, fome coming out, others going in. There " are walks feparated with lines, leading to all places " where strangers walk, and chuse those they like best. "When a woman has once taken place, she dares not return home, without a piece of money thrown into " her bosom by some stranger, and without being brought " by them out of the temple to lie with her. When the " stranger gives the earnest-money, he must say, For so " much I ask the Goddess Mylitta for thee; Venus being called Mylitta by the Assyrians. How small soever " the money be, 'tis unlawful to reject it, being applied " for facred uses. Nor is it allowed for a woman to re-" fuse a stranger, but, without chusing, she must follow 66 the first who offers her money. In fine, when a woman " has been with a stranger, she is thought to have done " her duty, to make the Goddess favourable to her; and " then she returns home, and will not prostitute herself for ^{*} Vide Selden de Diis Syris, lib. 2. cap. 7. Leuiden ubi supra. + Lib. 2. cap. 199. pag. 83.

Vide Leusdeni Philologum Hebræo-mixtum, pag. 302.

" a great reward. Women who are beautiful get foon " home, but hard-favoured ones are obliged to continue " long in the temple, before they fulfil the law; nay, fome of these poor wretches stay three or sour years." In C_{y-1} prus, there is a law much of the same nature. Strabo tells this story in fewer words t, "That 'tis the custom of all " Babylonian women to have to do with fome stranger. "They come in, or rather offer themselves in a crowd to " him, being well fet out, each one crowned with a gar-" land. The stranger who makes choice of one, throws into her lap a piece of money, and carries her out of the " temple; the money is confecrated to Venus." These passages may explain what we read in the book of Baruch, where describing the Idolatry of the Chaldeans and Baby-Ionians, he fays *, " The women furrounded with lines, if tin the way burning their chaff, and when any of them is pitched out by a passenger to lie with him, she up-" braids her neighbour that fhe had not the fame honour done her, and that her line was not broke." Thus they gloried in their shame. The same abominable custom was practised in other parts, as at Sicca in Afric, as we find in Valerius Maximus+, and at Corinth, where was a temple of Venus, at which the Corintbians had confecrated above 1000 Courtesans, who fold themfelves at a dear rate. This the law of God forbids, Lev. xix. 29. Do not prostitute thy daughter to be a whore, lest the land fall to whoredom, and become full of wickedness. But this was the vile Succoth-Benoth, the daughters of tabernacles among the heathen, or the Babylonian Venus, and there the abominable rites of their fuperstition, which should render their Religion detestable to every mortal.

This leads me to another Idol spoke of in Scripture, and with which the holy land was defiled; namely Ashtoreth, the Goddess of the Zidonians, frequently joined with Baal ||: The termination in the Hebrew plainly proves her to be a semale. Among the Greeks and Latins she was called Astarta or Astarte. Dr. Cumberland (‡), from that fragment of Sanchoniathon, preserved by Eusebius, which we have so oft spoke of, where it is said, Cronus begat on Astarte seven daughters called Titanides or Artemides, is of opinion, "That she was the wife of Cro-" mus or Cham, the great patron of Idolatry." Plutarch in his treatise of Isis and Osiris intimates that she was queen at Byblus, and Melcander, which is Molech, i. e. Cronus, was king there.—Besides, Astarte probably being the Syrian Goddess, of whom Lucian says, "That there was in her temple at Hierapolis, a constant commemo-" ration of the flood, and its drying up, made in her " fervice, inclines me to think that she was the fifter or " wife of Ham, who shared in that great deliverance, " for no other Syrian Goddess is so near that time : and " the city Ashtoreth Carnain bearing her name at Abra-" ham's entring into Canaan, affures us that she lived 66 before that time; and these limits fix her and Cronus " at least within four centuries next the flood." Strabo also says * at Edessa, and Hierapolis, that is the holy city, they worship the Goddess Atergatis. Some authors understand by Baal, the Sun, and by Ashtoreth the Moon. 'Tis faid, 2 Kings xxiii. 4. That Josiah commanded to bring forth out of the temple of the Lord all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for the grove, as in our version: but in the Hebrew it is said to Ashera. Any body may fee there could be no grove in the temple of Jerufalem. Ashera must then be the name of an idol. The fame deity was probably worshipped by the Greeks and Romans under the name of Diana or Lucina, the Goddefs of woods and groves.

[#] Geograp.lib. 16. pag. 745. * Baruch vi. 42, 43. † Memorabilium lib. 2. cap. 6. §. 15. || Judges ii. 13. and iii. 7. (‡) Phenician History, pag. 125.

There is yet another deity mentioned by the prophet, Ezekiel, Chap. viii. 14. Then he brought me to the gate of the Lord's house, which was towards the North, and be-bold there sat women weeping for Tammuz. The vulgar latin version renders it, plangentes Adonidem, weeping for Adonis. There is nothing offers more probable on this subject, than what Jerom has on the text; the sum whereof is †, That according to the sable, Adonis the darling of Venus, a handfome youth, being killed in the month of June, by a wild boar, was raifed again from the dead in the fame month; women were used to celebrate a folemn feast to him, in which they first wept for him as dead, and then fung and praised him as returned to life again. He adds, "that the wifer Gentiles in-"terpret the fable of Adonis dying and living again, to the feeds fown in the earth, where they corrupt first, and then spring up again." Thus the women at Jerufalem wept for Adonis the darling of Venus. Lucian de Dea Syra, if he be the author of that treatife, for he feems to be a more ingenuous Pagan than Lucian, who derides all religion, and plainly fets up for atheism; in his Jupiter Confutatus, and Jupiter Tragædus, and some other treatises +, tells us +, "I saw at Byblis the great "temple of Venus, in which are yearly celebrated the mysteries of Adonis, to which I am initiated; for its faid he was killed in the country by a wild boar; " and in perpetual remembrance of this event, a pub-" lick mourning is yearly celebrated with doleful lamentations; then a funeral, as of a dead body: and the next day is celebrated his Refurrection; for 'tis faid " he went up to heaven. One of the ceremonies is for " women to have their heads shaven, as the Egyptians " at the death of Apis. Those who resuse to be shaven, are obliged to prostitute themselves a whole day to " ftrangers, and the money which is got that way is " consecrated to Venus." Eusebius || mentions a temple of Venus at the top of Mount Libanus, which Constantine the Great caused to be demolished. "It was, says he, " the school of uncleanness to all people of a debauched " life. These esseminate men, who deserve not to be " called men, defiled themselves by a most infamous " proftitution, pleafing the devil, and ferving him with " base women. In short, the lewdest crimes were com-" mitted in that temple, as in a most filthy place, and there was no magistrate to punish them, because honest people durst not come near it." From what has been faid, it appears that the Phenicians had a feast at a fet time of the year, celebrated with all prophaneness, in which they wept with their Venus for the loss of Adonis. Byblis and the top of Lebanon, or Aphacus, were the places where these feasts were observed in the borders of Judea. The Egyptians called this God Tammuz or Ammuz, which fignifies in their language bidden, because the rites of this idol were covered or secret *. Nothing can be more probable, than that the Jewish women, according to the prophet's complaint, were come to that lamentable height of wickedness, as to celebrate that profane feast at the temple of Ferusalem.

^{*} Strabo Geogr. lib. 16. pag. 748. + Hieron. Tom. 5. Fol. m. 188.

⁺ Luciani opera, Tom. 2. pag. m. 148. # De Dea Syra. pag. 658. # De vita Constantini, lib.3. cap. 56.

There are other Deities less known, and what is meant by them not so universally agreed on; as these in Ifa. lxv. 11. But ye are they that for sake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop [Le Gad] and that furnish drink-offerings to that number. In the Hebrew, Le Meni or to Meni. Here are two names, Gad and Meni, which feem to be false heathen Gods, to whose honour facrifice and drink-offerings were made. The feptuagint version of that text may be thus rendred, You who have for saken me, and forgot my holy mountain; you prepare a table $\tau \tilde{\omega} \delta \alpha \iota \mu o \nu i \omega$ for the devil, and fill a mixture $\tau \tilde{\eta} \tau \dot{\nu} \times \eta$ to fortune. The vulgar Latin thus; Qui ponitis fortunæ mensam, & libatis super eam; Who set a table to Fortune, and sacrifice upon it. I shall not offer the several thoughts of interpreters and criticks upon this text, but only what feems most probable. 'Tis a constant tradition among the Hebrews, that Gad signifies good fortune; that is, the star and genius that pre-fides over happy births. When Zilpab bare Jacob a Son, Leah said, Bagad, a troop cometh. The ancient Paraphrast Jonathan and Onkelos read, The happy star or good fortune is come. As for Meni, some derive it from Manab, to tell or reckon, and conceive it fignifies a certain number of stars, or the feven planets. Monf. Jurieu + inclines to this opinion, that Gad and Meni are the two Genius's that prefide over generation, the two stars that over-rule nativities; and probably these two are the Sun and the Moon. The Sun is the grand principle of generation, and therefore ought to have the first place, and the moon the next to it. To confirm this, he adduces a passage of Strabo *, " That at the city Cabira " in Armenia, there is the temple of Menis Pharnaces, 66 to which belongs a town called Armeia, in which are many flaves, and under whose Jurisdiction is a district confecrated to the temple, the revenue whereof be-" longs to the priefts. The kings have so great a devo-" tion to it, that they swear by the fortune of the king " and the table of Pharnaces. 'Tis a temple of the "Moon, as that in Albania, and others in Phrygia, under the very fame name of the temple of Menis." Now upon this table 'tis highly probable there were victuals confecrated, offered to the Genius's ferved in the temple, viz. the Sun and the Moon. Herodote also mentions the table of the Sun among the Ethiopians. "Such, Jays be +, is the table of the Sun. There is in the suburbs " a green field covered every night by the magistrates of "the town, with all forts of fourfooted beafts roafted. "When the Sun is up, all people are free to come and 66 feast there. The inhabitants say the earth produces and " yields these things continually." The Greek word $\mu n \nu n$, the Moon, and $\mu n \nu$, a month, do so apparently come from Meni, that one cannot but think unun and Meni fignify the same star; and consequently Meni of Isaiah is the Moon. Israel was so mad upon these idols, as to prepare a table for them, and to pour out mixt wine for drink-offerings to them: they would pinch their families, rather than stint their superstitions.

^{*} Greenhill on Ezek. viii, 14. + Hist. des Dogmes, &c. pag. 701.

Another Idol-Deity is the Goddess Sheshach, Jer. xxv. 15—26. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Take the wine-cup of this sury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee to drink it.—All the kings of the North, far and near, and all the kingdoms of the world which are upon the sace of the earth, and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. Jerem. li. 41. How is Sheshach taken?

^{*} Geograph.lib.12

Chap. 2. Of Mahuzzim. 505 and how is the praise of the whole earth surprized? How is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations? Here both Babylon and Sheshach are mentioned, and the latter expounded by the former. 'Tis conceived that Babylon is called Sheshach, by the name of one of her Idols, in an opprobrious fense, as usual with the prophets, from the Idol Shach worshipped there, and in whose honour they kept a festival for five days together: And 'tis faid, that during this festival, Cyrus took Babylon. Athenœus speaks of this feast, saying *, Berosus, in the first book of the Babylonish history, relates, that on the 16th of the Calends of September, the feast Saicea was celebrated at Babylon for five days, during which time it was customary for masters to obey their servants: one of them being then master of the bouse, was clothed in a royal garment, and called Zoganez. Ctesias makes mention of the same feast +, and Strabo discourses of it more fully ±.

Another Deity is the Mabuzzim, of which Daniel speaks, chap. xi. 37, 38, 39. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any God: for he shall magnify himself above all. But in his estate shall he honour the God of forces, [in the Hebrew, Mahuzzim:] and a God whom his fathers knew not, shall he honour with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and pleasant things. Thus shall he do in the most strong holds with a most strange God, whom he shall acknowledge, and encrease with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain. Monf. Jurieu is of opinion ||, that the person here meant is Antiochus Epiphanes; that this God Maozzim, or Mahuzzim, whom he was to honour with his homage and gifts, is the Roman eagles, or the Roman empire, to which the foldiers bowed down; and Antiochus himself, who was the terror of Asia, became tributary to them. But I am pleafed with the opinion of Joseph Mede better: He conceives  this chapter of Daniel, at least a part of it, is to be applied to the latter times of the Roman empire, and to the church's apostacy and defection under the reign of Antichrift, and that the Mahuzzims are the Protectores Dij. fuch as Saints and Angels, which the church of Rome worships. Thus then he gives the following paraphrase or explication of that passage in Daniel‡, "Toward the end of the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, the Roman 66 shall prevail and set up the fourth kingdom, making " himself master of the kingdom of Macedon, and ad-" vancing himself from this time forward by continual " conquest, shall lord it over every king and nation; yea, " Christ the God of Gods, and Lord of the kings of the " earth—the Roman shall mock, blaspheme, and cru-"cify; and by most bloody edicts, shall persecute and " massacre his servants the Christians, and yet shall pro-" fper in his empire, until these outrageous times be en-"ded, that is, until the days of Constantine. When that " time comes, the Roman state shall forsake the Idols, " and false Gods, whom their fathers worshipped; and " shall acknowledge Christ a God, whom their fathers "knew not. At that time the defire of women, and " married life shall be discountenanced; yea, soon " after the Roman shall carry, as if he regarded not any "God, and with antichristian pride, shall magnify him-" felf over all. With the Christian God, who is a " jealous God, and to be worshipped alone, he shall " worship Mabuzzims, faints or angels, as protectors, " even in his feat and temple, and honour them with " gold and filver, precious flones, and pleasant things. "And tho' the Christians God, whom he shall profess " to acknowledge and worship, can endure no compe-"titors, yet shall he confecrate his temples and monaf-"teries, ecclefiaftical holds, jointly to the Christians "God, and these Mahuzzims, Deo & Santtis; yea, he " shall share whole kingdoms and provinces among them, " St. George shall have England; St. Andrew, Scotland; " St. Dennis, France; St. James, Spain; St. Mark, Ve-" nice; and bear rule as prefidents and patrons of their " feveral Countries.". Thus Joseph Mede. And he has many Chap. 2. The Idolatry of Sun, Moon, and Stars. 207 many learned remarks in his book of the Apostacy of the latter times, to confirm this opinion. The continuators of Mr. Pool's notes, have the same fentiments on the text; and an anonymous author, in a book entitled, The Visions of Daniel explained, printed at London in 1700, where are many thoughts which please me.

 Apostacy of latter Times, pag. m. 93, &c.

^{*} Deipnosophistæ, lib. 14. cap. 17. + Ctesiæ fragmenta subjuncta Herodoto, Edit. Lond. 1679. pag. 674. # Geograph. lib. 11. | Hist. des Dogmes, &c. pag. 706, & seq

Tho' under the Idols we have discoursed of, Moloch, Baal, Ashtoreth, and the rest, the Sun, Moon, and Stars lay hid; yet most of the people, especially the vulgar, knew not what they worshipped under these names. But it appears that the Sun, Moon, and Host of Heaven were worshipped by the Jews, when they turned to Idolatry, after the example of the neighbouring heathen, without images, by an humble proftration before them, or their emblems, light and fire. The God of Ifrael does expressly forbid it, Deut. iv. 15-19. Take ye therefore good heed—lest thou lift up thine eyes to heaven; and when thou seest the Sun, and the Moon, and all the Host of Heaven, should be driven to worship them and serve them. He expressly commands any man or woman to be stoned to death, that shall be convicted to have served other Gods, and worshipped them, either the Sun, Moon, or any of the Host of Heaven, Deut. xvii. 3-5. But in the time of the Jews apostacy, they and their wicked kings broke through all these prohibitions; for in the history of Josiah, we read, "That this religious prince put " down the idolatrous priefts, whom the king of Judah " had ordained to burn incense in the high places, in the " cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jeru" salem; them also that burnt incense unto Baal, to the "Sun, and to the Moon, and to the Planets, and to all "the Host of Heaven. He took away also the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the Sun, at the " entring in of the House of the Lord, by the chamber of " Nathan-Melech the chamberlain, which was in the " fuburbs, and burnt the chariots of the Sun with fire, " 2 Kings xxiii. 5—11." This adoration of the Sun passed into Egypt; for the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xliii. 10, 12, 13. foretelling the ruin of that country, fays, Nebu-

208 The Idolatry of Sun, Moon, and Stars.

Nebuchadnezzar shall break the images of Bethshemesh, or of the house of the Sun, and the houses of the Gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire. Finally, It cannot be denied that the Sun was worshipped without veils by the Syrians, and afterward by the Hebrews, as we see by the prophet Ezekiel, chap. viii. 16. He brought me into the inner-court of the Lord's house, and behold at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about twenty-five men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the East, and they worshipped the Sun toward the East.

In the introduction to this chapter, when discoursing of the Origin of Idolatry, I proved that this worship of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, was the most ancient kind of Idolworship, long before images were introduced. To which I add the testimony of Diodorus Siculus*. " The most " ancient people of Egypt, fays he, beholding the world " above them, and aftonished with the fight of the uni-" verse, did think the Sun and the Moon were the two " principal and eternal Gods: the latter they called " Isis, and the former Osiris, agreeable to the etymology of the name; for if you explain Ofiris by a Greek word, it will fignify many eyes, and justly, fince the "Sun stretching his rays every where, beholds the whole " earth and fea, as with many eyes." From this ancient idolatrous worship of the Sun, several places in Canaan probably took their names, as Hen-shemesh, the fountain of the Sun, Josh. xv. 7. Hirshemesh, Josh. xix. 41. the city of the Sun. From the worship of the Sun. toward the East, mentioned by Ezekiel, rose the custom of some Christian Churches to worship Eastward, which Pope Leo I. does condemn as a superstition not to be tolerated †. From the worship the Persians gave to the in the form of a chariot, in honour of the Sun #.

The

Sun, flow the horses of the Sun, and the Hammanim, or chariots of the Sun, which the good king Josiah destroyed. Abenezra says, these Hammanim were arched houses, built ^{*} Bibl. Hist. lib. 1. cap. 11. + Serm. 7. De Nativitate, ‡ In Isa. xvii. 8. Apud Jurieu, Hist. des Dogmes, &c.

The Perfians and Chaldeans being very ancient, who formed fome kind of commonwealth in a little time after the deluge, when they built the tower of Babel, near the fame place where the city of Babylon was afterwards erected; it may be proper here to explain their Idolatry, especially since it may illustrate and confirm what we have been discoursing concerning the worship of the Sun.

The learned Dr. Prideaux * gives this account of the Religion of the Perfians: "The Sabians worshipped the "Sun, Moon, and Stars per sacella, that is, by taberna-" cles, and afterwards by images. By these tabernacles they meant the orbs themselves, in which the intelli-" gences had their habitations. And therefore when they " paid their devotions to any one of them, they directed " their worship toward the planet, in which they sup-" posed he dwelt. But these orbs, by their rising and "fetting, being as much under the horizon as above, "they were at a loss how to address to them in their ab-" fence. To remedy this, they had recourse to the in-" vention of images, in which, after their consecration, "they thought these Intelligences, or inferiour Deities, "to be as much present by their influence, as in the pla-" nets themselves, and that all addresses to them were " made as effectually before the one, as before the other, " and this was the beginning of Image-worship among "them. To these images were given the names of the " planets they represented, which were the same they are " still called by. And hence it is, that we find Saturn, " Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, Mercury, Venus, and Diana, to " be first ranked in the polytheism of the ancients. For "they were their first Gods. After this, a notion ob-" taining, that good men departed had a power with "God also to mediate and intercede for them, they dei-" fied many of those whom they thought to be fuch; " and hence the number of their Gods increased in the " idolatrous times of the world. This Religion first be-" gan among the Chaldeans, which their knowledge in aftro-

Vol. I.

^{*} Connect, of Hist, of Old and New Test, Part I. pag. 177-179. in Octavo.

aftronomy helped to lead them to. And from this " it was, that Abraham separated himself when he came " out of Chaldea. From the Chaldeans, it spread itself over all the East, where the professors of it had the name of Sabians. From them it passed into Egyst, " and from thence to the Grecians, who propagated it " to all the western nations of the world. The remainder of this Sect still subfists in the East, under " the name of Sabians, which they pretend to have re-" ceived from Sabius, a fon of Seth's. And among the books, wherein the doctrines of their fect are con-" tained, they have one which they call the book of " Seth, and fay, that it was written by that patriarch. "That which hath given them the greatest credit among "the people of the East, is, that the best of their astroon nomers have been of this Sect, as Thebet Ebn Korrab, 46 Albattani, and others. For the Stars being the Gods they worshipped, they made them the chief subject of their studies. These Sabians, in the consecrating of " their images, used many incantations to draw down 66 into them from the Stars those intelligences, for whom " they erected them, whose power and influence, they 66 held, did afterward dwell in them. And from hence the whole foolery of Telesms, which some make so much ado about, had its original." [They are now, fince the growth of Christianity, and the spreading of Mahometism in Persia, reduced to an inconsiderable Sect; but in ancient times there were very many of them in the world.]

"Directly opposite to these were the Magians, another Sect, who had their original in the same eastern countries. For they abominating all images, worshipped God only by fire. They began first in Persis, and there, and in India, were the only places where this sect was propagated, and there they remain even to this day. Their chief doctrine was, that there were two principles, one which was the cause of all good, and the other the cause of all evil, that is to say, God and the Devil. That the former is represented by light, and the other by darkness, and that of the composition of these two, all things in the world are made. The good God they name Yaz-" dan, and also Ormuzd, and the evil God Abraman. "The former is by the Greeks called Oramasdes, and the latter Arimanius. Some of them contended, 66 that the good God only was eternal, and that the other was created. But they both agreed in this, that "there will be a continual opposition between these two "till the end of the world: that then the good God " shall overcome the evil God, and that from thence-66 forward, each of them shall have his world to him-" felf; that is, the good God his world with all good " men with him, and the evil God his world with all evil men with him: that darkness is the truest sym-" bol of the evil God, and light the truest fymbol of the " good God. And therefore they always worshipped him " before fire, as being the cause of light, and especially 66 before the fun, as being, in their opinion, the per-" fectest fire, and causing the perfectest light. And for 66 this reason, in all their temples they had fire con-"tinually burning on altars erected for that purpose, 66 Before these sacred fires, they offered up all their pub-" lick devotions, and their private devotions before their " private fires in their own houses. These were the "tenets of this Sect, when on the death of Cambyses, " Smerdis and Patizithes, the two chief ring-leaders of " it, contended for the fovereignty." The fame author informs us*, "That in the time of " Darius Hystaspes appeared in Persia the famous pro-" phet of the Magians, whom the Persians call Zer-

" dusht, or Zaratush, and the Greeks, Zoroastres. "He was the greatest impostor, except Mahomet, that " ever appeared in the world, and had all the craft and

" enterprifing boldness of that Arab, but much more "knowledge, being skilled in all the learning of the " East that was in his time; whereas the other could

" neither write nor read: and particularly, he was throughly versed in the fewish Religion, and in all P 2 "the ^{*} See Prideaux's Connection, Part I. pag. 211, to 227.

212

" the facred writings of the Old Testament then ex-"tant.-"Tis generally faid of him, that he had been " a fervant to one of the prophets of I/rael; and hence "'tis conceived, that he was, as to his origin, a Yew.— " He might have ferved under Daniel, who lived till the "time of Cyrus, and therefore Zoroastres might have " been his contemporary.—He did not found a new " Religion, as his fucceffor in imposture Mahomet did, " but only took upon him to reform the old one of the Magians, which had been for many ages past the an-" cient Religion of the Medes, as well as of the Persians. -- The chief reformation he made in the Magian " fuperflition, was in the first principle of it. For where-" as they before had held the being of two first causes, "the one good and the other evil, as has been faid, he " taught a principle fuperiour to them both, one furepreme God, who created both light and darkness, and " out of these, according to the pleasure of his will, " made all things elfe. In fine, his doctrine was, "that there was one supreme Being, independent and felf-" existing from all eternity. That under him there were 44 two Angels, one of light, and the other of darkness; " and that these two, out of the mixture of light and " darkness, made all things that are. That they are in " a perpetual struggle with each other: where the An-"gel of light prevails, there the most is good; and " where the Angel of darkness prevails, there the most " is evil. That this ftruggle shall continue to the end of the world. That then there shall be a general Re-" furrection, and a Day of Judgment, wherein a just " retribution shall be rendred to all according to their " works. After which the Angel of darkness, and his " disciples, shall suffer everlasting darkness, for the pu-" nishment of their evil deeds; and the Angel of light, " and his disciples, shall go into a world of their own, " where they shall receive everlasting light, as the re-" ward due unto their good deeds: and after this they " fhall remain separated for ever, and light and dark-" ness shall be no more mixed together to all eternity. "All this the remainder of that Sect, which is now in " Perfia 1

" Persia and India, do, without variation after so many " ages, still hold even to this day. Another refor-" mation, which he made in the Magian Religion, was, stat he caused fire temples to be built wherever he came, that fo the facred fires might be the better " preferved, and the publick offices of their Religion " better performed before them, than it could be by al-" tars on tops of hills, where, by storms and tempests, " the fire was fometimes extinguished, and their offices " interrupted. Not that they worshipped the fire, (for "this they always disowned) but God in the fire. Zoco roaftres, among other his impostures, having feigned " that he was taken up into heaven, he pretended not, as Mahomet after did, there to have feen God, but " only to have heard him speaking out of the midst of a great and most bright flame of fire; and therefore " taught his followers, that fire was the truest Shechinah of the Divine Presence, and ordered them still to di-" rect all their worship, first toward the Sun, which they so called Mithra, and next toward their facred fires. "Hence, fays our Author, the meaning of that text, " Ezek. viii. 16. is, that people had turned their backs on the true worship of God, and had gone over to that of the Magians."

" Zoroastres having thus retained, in his reformation of " Magianism, the ancient usage of that Sect in worship-" ping God before fire, to give the facred fires in the " temples, which he had erected, the greater veneration, " he pretended he had brought some sacred fire from " heaven, when he was there, and placed it on the altar " of the first fire-temple he erected at Xiz in Media, " from whence they fay it was propagated to all the " rest. For this reason their priests watch it day and " night, and never fuffer it to go out; and they feed it, " with great superstition, only with wood stript of its " bark, as most clean, and never blow it with bellows, " or with their breath, for fear of polluting it. To cast " any unclean thing into it, was death by the law, when " those of that Sect reigned. They mumbled their prayers rather than spoke them, as the popish P 3 " priests or priests do their masses, without letting the people arc' ticulately hear one word. Tho' they should hear, c' they would not understand, since their publick prayers to this day are in the old Persian language, in which « Zoroastres first composed them about 2200 years ago; and in this absurdity the Romanists partake with them. « Zoroastres, to gain the greater reputation to his pretensions, retired to a cave, and there lived a long time as a recluse.—He removed from thence into " Bactria, the most eastern province of Persia—and thence he went in person to India, among the Brach-" mans; and having learned from them knowledge in 66 mathematicks, aftronomy, and natural philosophy, "he returned and instructed his Magians in these arts. "He went next to the royal court at Susa, where he " managed his pretentions with that craft, that Darius " himself became a proselyte to his new Religion, whose « example, in a short time, drew in the nobility and all "the great men of the kingdom; and thus it became 66 the national Religion of that country, and fo con-" tinued for many ages after, till this imposture was " fupplanted by that of Mahomet, raised by almost the fame arts. There is a remnant of these Magians 66 still in Persia and India, who to this day observe the 66 fame Religion Zoroastres first taught them; for they " still have his book, wherein their Religion is contained, which they keep and reverence as the Christians do " the Bible, and the Mahometans the Alcoran, making it the rule of their faith and manners. This book he composed while he lived retired in the cave. There "are contained his pretended revelations, 'Tis called " Zendavesta, and by contraction Zend; or, as the vul-" gar pronounce it, Zundavestow, and Zund. The word " originally fignifieth a fire-kindler. Dr. Hyde, late " professor of the Hebrew and Arabic tongues at Ox-" ford, being well skilled in the old Perfic, as well as in the modern, offered to have published the whole " book with a Latin Translation, could be have been " fupported in the expences of the edition. want of this, the defign died with him. In this book are " found

Chap.2. Of the Persian Idolatry.

" found a great many things taken out of the Old Testa-" ment. It inferts a great part of David's Plalms, gives " fome account of the creation and deluge, tho' dif-" guifed and mixed with many things of Zoro aftres's own " invention. He commends Abraham, but pretends that " his own Religion is the fame that Abraham professed. "He enjoins many things to be observed that are in the " Levitical law; only he takes away the law about in-" ceft, as if nothing of this nature were unlawful. He " allows a man to marry not only his own fifter or "daughter, but even his own mother. He that was born of this worst fort of incest, was looked on as the " best qualified to be a priest among the Magians. This " is fuch an abomination, fuch a base piece of flattery, " as tho' other things had been right, yet 'tis enough to " pollute the whole book. The Persian kings being ex-" ceedingly given to fuch incestuous marriages, this " feems to have been contrived to flatter them in their " wickedness, and the better to engage and fix them to "this Sect. Alexander the Great, when he conquered " Persia, did, by a law, forbid such incestuous copula-"tions. Zoroastres having obtained this wonderful fuc-" cefs, did return to Balch, where, according to his " own institution, he was obliged to have his residence, " as Archimagus, or Head of the Sect, and there he " reigned in spirituals, with the same authority over the " whole empire, as the king did in temporals. --- But " after his return to Balch, he enterprifed upon Argasp "king of the oriental Scythians, who was a zealous Sa-" bian, to draw him over to his Religion; and backed "his attempt with the authority of \bar{D} arius.——The " Scythian prince refented this with fuch indignation, "that he invaded Battria with an army; and having "there defeated the forces of Darius that opposed him, " flew Zoroastres, with all the priests of his patriarchal " church, which amounted to the number of 80 persons, " and demolished all the fire-temples in that province. "This happened in the 35th year of the reign of Darius." This, and more on the fame subject, has Dr. Prideaux, from a book of Thomas Hyde, De Religione veterum P 4 Perfarum, Perfarum.

Persarum, Of the Religion of the ancient Persans, and from feveral other authors.

I shall add a few other passages concerning the superstition of the Persians, in the period of time we are speaking of. Q. Curtius, giving an account of the march of Darius's army, fays, The fire, which they called eternal, was carried before them on filver altars: The Magi came after it finging hymns after the Persian manner; 365 youths clothed in scarlet followed, according to the number of the days of the year, as the Persians reckon it *. The same author brings in Darius conjuring his foldiers by the fire, as the principal Deity of their country: I therefore conjure you, fays he, by the gods of our country, by the eternal fire carried upon the altars, and by the shining of the sun which rises within my dominion's, by the cternal memory of Cyrus, &c. +. Strabo fays ||, Among the Persians there are great inclosures called Hugas in the midst whereof is an altar, upon which the Magi keep an immortal fire upon a heap of ashes. They go daily into the place to fay certain prayers, which last about an hour. There they stand before the fire with a bundle of reds in their hands, and a mitre upon their heads; the strings whereof hang before and behind, and these before reach to their lies. This is tractifed in the temples of Anaitis and Amanus, who have there their temples; and the statue of Amanus is carried in from. This I am an eye-witness of. He also says, They had so great a respect to the fire, that if one had blown upon it, or thrown any dead thing or dirt into it, they were punished with the severest death. This furious zeal for their fire-temples continued even to the fourth or fifth century, after Christianity was received into the world. For Theodoret tells us t, " That a cer-" tain bishop of Persia named Audas, from an indiscreet zeal, burnt one of these temples dedicated to the " facred fire called Huggia. Haligerdes king of Persia befo ing informed by the Mazians, commanded him at 66 first only to rebuild it, which he refusing to do, the 66 king threatned to demolish all the christian churches 66 in his dominions, which he actually did, and ordered * Curtius, lib 3. cap. 3. + Lib.4. cap. 14. pag. m. 82.

Geogr. lib. 17. + Hift. Eccl. lib. 5 cap. 39.

Audas also to be killed; yea, raised a cruel Persecution against the Christians in Persia, which continued 30 years, and therein perished an incredible number of Christians with unheard of torments."

That horses were dedicated to the sun by the Persians, yea fometimes facrificed to him, is affirmed by many ancient authors. Q. Curtius, when giving an account of the march of Darius's army, fays , " After this " came a chariot drawn with white horses, followed by " a horse of an extraordinary size, which they called "the horse of the sun. Those who led the horses wore " white garments, and had golden rods in their hands." Justin, who abridged the history of Trogus Pompeius, fays +, "The Persians esteem the Sun as the only God, and "that horses are to be consecrated to him." Ovid seems to intimate, that horses are not only consecrated to the Sun by the Persians, but also offered in facrifice to him ||. Plutarch gives this account of the Persian superstition, "This is the opinion of the greatest and wifest of part of mankind; for fome believe that there are two "Gods, as it were two rival workmen, the one whereof "they make to be the maker of good things, and the " other of bad; and some call the better of these God, " and the other Dæmon, as does Zoroastres the Magian, "whom they report to be 5000 years elder than Trojan times. [N. B. A groß mistake in Chronology, where the Heathens commonly err, having no fixed standard about ancient times.] "This Zoroastres therefore called the one " of these Oromazes, and the other Arimanius; and af-" firmed moreover, that the one of them did, of any "thing fenfible, the most refemble light, and the other " darkness and ignorance; but that Mithras was in the " middle betwixt them. For which cause the Persians " call Mithras the mediator. And they tell us that " he first taught mankind to make vows and offerings ee of ^{} Curtius, lib.3. cap.3. † Justini Hist. lib. 1. cap. 10. Nam & solem Persa unum Deum esse credunt, & equos eidem Deo sacratos serunt. || Fastorum, lib. 1. ver. 355.

Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum, Ne detur celeri victima tarda Deo.

" of thanksgiving to the one, and to offer averting and feral sacrifice to the other *." Finally, I shall add the testimony of Herodote; "I have found, says he +, "this to be the Religion of the Persians: They nei-"ther build temples nor make statues, they fet up no " altars; yea, they account it madness to do so. This, " in my opinion, is because they do not think, as the " Greeks, that the Gods had their origin from among "men. Their way is, to go to the top of the highest hills, and there to facrifice victims to Jupiter; fo they " call the whole circuit of the heavens. They facrifice " to the fun, to the moon, to fire, water and winds; " to these only they facrificed from the beginning." Herodote has also this remarkable story concerning the Persian superstition ||, "Cyrus marching against Babylon, being stopt by the river Gyndez, that runs into Ti-" gris, one of his white confecrated horses briskly en-" tered the river, and was fwallowed up, and drowned in a whirl-pool. Cyrus was fo enraged at the river, " as he threaten'd to make it fo fmall, as women might " go over it a foot; and for that end ftopt his march " a whole fummer, and cut the river into 180 channels " upon each fide, and the next feafon he profecuted

" his defign against Babylon."

To conclude; As to the horses or chariots of the sun, which Josiah took away, probably they were brought in among the Jews by Manasseb; no prince, that ever sat upon the throne of Judab, having carried the rebellion against God so far as he. For he sent almost into the remotest parts of the world for such abominations to fill Israel with, and borrowed this of the Persian. The horses might be consecrated to the sun, tho' not offered as facrifices upon the altar. 'Tis also evident, that Jo-fiab in his reformation, put down the priests who burnt incense to Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, [in the Hebrew, to Mazaloth] and to all the host of heaven, 2 Kings xxiii. 5. It does not appear that in the times of the kings of Judab, these planets were worshipped by the names they have had fince. Venus was called Helel, the son of the morning, Isa. xiv. 12. and other planets and remarkable stars, by some other names; but they had not then the fables about the feveral conftellations and ftars, that were afterwards invented by the Greeks and Romans.

^{*} Plutarch, of Ilis and Ofiris. Engl. Edit. 1704. pag. 105. + Herodot. lib. 1. cap. 131. || Lib. 1. cap. 189.

Beside the idolatry the Jews borrowed from their neighbours, they had some peculiar to themselves; as that of Gideon's Ephod in the book of Judges, Chap. viii. 22—29. The case seems to be this; Gideon having by God's command erected an altar in his own city Ofbrah, Judg. vi. 24-26. for an extraordinary time and occasion, thought it might be continued for ordinary use; and therefore, as he intended to procure priefts, fo he defigned to make prieftly garments, especially an ephod, as the most costly, which, besides its use in sacred administrations, was also the instrument by which the mind of God was enquired and discovered, I Sam. xxx. 7. and might feem necessary for the judge to have at hand, that he might confult God upon all occasions. 'Tis not probable he made use of the whole 1700 fhekels of gold, mentioned in the text for that use; for a shekel weighing four drachms, or half an ounce, if you reduce 1700 half ounces into pounds, allowing 16 ounces to the pound, the whole will amount to 53 pound, two ounces of gold, which would be too weighty a cloak for any priest's shoulders. Probably then he applied a part only of these shekels to make the Ephod, and other things appertaining to it, and referved the remainder of this, and the other spoils, for the use of his own house, which from that time became a confiderable family in Israel, till it ended in Abimelech. I see no occasion for Jurieu's conjecture *, that this Ephod was a military enfign or standard for the soldiers, for preserving the memory of the defeat of the Midianites; for the Ephod was only appointed for religious use. If it be enquired, how did Israel go a whoring after this Ephod, which became a snare to Gideon and to his house, Judg. viii. 27.

220 Of Margemah and the Brazen Serpent.

I answer with Mr. Pool on the text, That they committed superstition and idolatry with it, going thither to enquire the will of God, whereby they were drawn from the true Ephod appointed by God for this end, and which was to be worn by the high priest only. This became an occasion of sin and ruin to him and his house. Tho' Gideon was a good man, and did this with an honest mind, to set up religion in his own family, yet there were many fins in it. (1.) Superstition and will-worship, ferving God by a device of his own, which was frequently forbidden by God. (2.) Prefumption in wearing or causing other priests to wear this kind of Ephod, which was peculiar to the high priest. (3.) Transgression of a plain command of worshipping God ordinarily but at one place, and one altar, Deut. xii. 5. and withdrawing people from that place to another. (4.) Making a fearful schissm or division among the people. (5.) Laying a stumblingblock, or an occasion of superstition and idolatry before them, whom he knew to be too prone to it.

Some authors find an idol mentioned in Prov. xxvi. 8. rendring the Hebrew word Margemah, Acervum Mercurii, * Mercury's Heap, tho' the Chaldee paraphraft, and very many modern interpreters find nothing of this in that text. I doubt if Mercury's name was known in the time of Solomon.

The Brazen Serpent became an object of idolatry to the Jews, and was therefore broken in pieces by Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 4. He removed the high places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brazen ferpent that Moses had made: for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it; and he called it Nehushtan, that is, a piece of brass. It is not easy to determine when this idolatry began. Some conceive its commencement was in the time of the kings of Judah; others apprehend the Israelites worshipped it even in the time of the Judges, ever since they began to be idolaters. The form of a serpent, so odious to manthind, should have made them abhor this idolatry; but this this could not hinder them, when they faw their neighbours worship their Gods in prodigious forms; as Molech under the figure of a bull with hands; Dagon, half a man, and half a fish; Baalberish, under the figure of a woman with towers on her head; Beelzebub, the God of Accaron, in a three-headed statue, a dog, a wolf, and a lion's head. The devil, to confecrate the form in which he feduced Eve, as it were to invalidate the first promise, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy feed and her feed, did use all his efforts to turn mens superstition this way, notwithstanding their natural aversion to the worship of serpents. The Roman History tells us *, That Rome being grievously afficted with the pestilence, the Romans sent ambassadors to bring from Epidaurus to Rome, the fign of Æsculapius, which was a serpent, that went aboard of its own accord, in which it appeared to them that God develt. When the ship came to the issee in the Tiber, the God landing there of his own accord, a temple was consecrated to Esculapius. Ovid also + gives a poetical account of it, That in that place Æsculapius is worshipped in a statue of a human figure, with a staff in his left hand, and a serpent about it.

^{*} Selden de Diis Syris, syntagma 2. cap. 15. pag. m. 351.

The ferpent was one of the most venerable fymbols of Egyptian religion, and very famous among the Phenicians. Eusebius gives a full account of it, in the fragment he has from Philo Biblius, the translator of Sanchoniathon. He fays ||, Taautus attributed some divinity to the nature of the dragon and serpents, and the Phenicians and Egyptians approved his opinion, for indeed these creatures abound much more in spirits than other Reptiles; they have a fiery nature, and swiftness that cannot be extressed. Therefore 'tis looked on as holy, and comes into the mysteries. 'Tis immortal and resolves into itself; for it cannot die a natural death, but must die by the violence of some blow. The Phenicians call it a good Dæmon, the Egyptians, Cneph, and give him a sparrow-hawk's head, the whole very like the figure of the Greek O. Their meaning is to represent the world by this circle, and the good Dæmon by the ferpent in the midst of it. The Genius's, protectors of cities and countries, called tutelar Gods, were worshipped under the symbol of serpents. The figure of two serpents at the entry was a fign the place was confecrated to some hero or deity, according to Persius*, Away children, empty not your selves here, the place is sacred by the pitture of two serpents. Many other testimonies might be brought into the field to shew, that the devil affected to be worshipped in the form of a serpent all the world over. The story of Bel and the Dragon, in the last chapter of the apocryphal additions to Daniel, may confirm it. Dr. Nichols relates +, That Sigismundus in his history of Muscovy declares, That the Samogithæ there worship a ferpent, which they keep by them, and tells a story of a poor man that was horribly abused by the Devil for relinquishing the worship of his serpent. The like Gaguinus in his Sarmatia Europæa tells of the Lithuanians, as also Scaliger in his exercitations; and that they sacrifice to them milk and cocks. The like serpent-worship the same Scaliger relates of the people of Calecut in the Indies, in his notes upon Aristotle's book of animals. And Philip Melancthon tells a strange story of some priests somewhere in Asia, that carry about a serpent in a brazen vessel, which they attend with a great deal of musick and charms in verse: The serpent lifts up himself, and opens his mouth, and thrusts out the bead of a beautiful virgin; the devil thereby glorying in this miscarriage among these poor idolaters. And some books of travels into the West-Indies give the like account there.

^{*} Tit. Livii epitome, lib. 11. + Ovid. Metamorph. lib. 15. fab. 50. De præp. Evang. lib. 1. cap. 10. pag. m. 40, 41. Edit. 1683.

But I have infifted long enough upon the idolatry of the Egyptians, Phenicians, Syrians, Ifraelites, Jews, Cananites, and other eastern nations. Only I hope what hath been said may in some measure give light to several passages of the Sacred Scriptures; may present us with a view of the lamentable condition of the Gentile world, who knew not the only living and true God; and hence we may infer the inestimable benefit of true Christianity, which ^{*} Satyr. 1. vcr. 113.

Pinge duos angues. Pueri, facer est locus: extra Merite-

[†] Dr. Nichols's Conference with a Theist, pag. 200,

Chap. 2. Calumnies against the Jews. 223 which banishes this abominable idolatry, and discovers the only way to everlasting life.

One thing must be further remarked, That tho' the Yews were really most guilty of several kinds of idolatry, especially before the Babylonish captivity, as has been already declared, and for which the Lord in his justice punished them; yet the Heathens very unjustly charged them with some acts of idolatry of which they were innocent. The Greeks, and after them the Romans are the only ancient pagan writers, which are now remaining, except a few imperfect copied fragments. Now the Greeks themselves knew nothing of the Jews, till about the middle of the Persian monarchy, long after the captivity, and the restoration from Babylon. Since that time it does not appear that the Fews polluted themselves with heathenish idolatry, and therefore the Gentiles abhorred them. I have in the former chapter made use of the testimony of several ancient writers to confirm the authority of several facts related in the bible *, and taken notice of some of the fabulous reports of the Heathens against the Jews. I shall not now resume their testimonies at length. Only I observe, that Justin, as well as some other profane writers, says +, The Jews were banished from Egypt for the scab; which is nothing but the boils and blains inflicted on the Egyptians for refusing to let Israel go, Exod. ix. 8——12. Those sa-cred things of Egypt, which, he says, Moses stole away, are only the Jewels and precious things the Israelites borrowed from the Egyptians before their departure: And when the Egyptians fought to recover them, the tempests, by which, he fays, they were obliged to return home, is the drowning of Pharaoh and his hoft in the red-fea, whereby they went to a fatal home.

Plutarch very unjustly accuses the Jews of observing Bacchanals, or rites in honour of Bacchus ||, at the feast of tabernacles. But Cornelius Tacitus says more truly, That the rites of the Jews differ from other nations

^{*} See Pag. 123, to 127, † Lib. 36. cap. 2. | Symposiacs, Book 4, Quest. 5.

nations *. Yet the fame author reproacheth them as guilty of worshipping the ass; for he says +, When they came out of Egypt, nothing troubled them more than the want of water; when they happened to meet a great company of wild affes, Moses followed them, gueffing that in the grass where they used to feed, there would be strings of water. — The figure of an ass, says he, which stopt their wandring and shewed them the sountain of water, be consecrated to be worshipped in the holy place. This was alfo objected by Appion the Grammarian, and refuted long ago by Josephus, with many others of that kind. Tolephus speaks thus ||, "The Egyptians should not re-"proach us with calumnies of this kind. The ass is as good as the goats and other vile creatures they adore as deities. How can we be guilty in this matter, fince we use still the same laws? Our city has been " often oppressed with the fortune of war as well as others. "Theos, Pompey the great, Licinius Crassus, and last of " all Titus Cafar entred our temple, and found nothing " of that kind there, only pure religion. - Appion " should have considered this, unless he had the heart of " an afs, or the impudence of a dog, which his people " use to worship. We ascribe no honour or power to " affes, as the Egyptians do to ferpents, and crocodiles, when they account those who are bitten by the fere pents, or devoured by the Crocodiles, happy and "worthy of God." It is well known that when the Emperor Caius Caligula ordered the Jews to receive his flatue into the remple, they refused; upon which he threatned a destructive war against them, which was prevented by the address of king Agrippa, and the embaffy of Philo Judaus t. The Jews would rather lose their lives, than fuffer any idolatrous image to be fet up in their temple: fo far were they from the worship of an ass, which indeed they are never charged with, but by

† Ioid. --- Effigiem animalis, quo monstrante errorem sitimque depulerant, penetrali fairavere. | Contra Appion m, lib. 2.

Joseph, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 10, 11. Philo Judeus Legat. ad Caium.

^{*} Hist. lib. 5. cap. 2. Moses, quo sibi in posterum gentem sirmaret, novos ritus contrariosque exteris mortalibus indidit, prosana illic omnia que apud nos sacra, &c.

Chap.2. Idolatry of the Greeks and Romans. 522 the calumnies of their adversaries. And no less abfurd is the calumny of *Petronius, who charges them with worshipping a swine.

Leaving the Eastern nations, 'tis proper now to move to the West, and consider the idolatry of the Greeks, Romans, and other western nations, before the coming of Christ. In the entry upon this subject, I shall offer some general remarks, which may give some light to this whole affair. First, Nothing can be more mon-strous than the idolatry of the Greeks and Romans. 'Tis well known all the world over, 'tis contained in their books, in their poets and claffics, which are in the hands even of children. There we meet with an incredible number of Gods. Hefiod reckons no less than three myriads, or thirty thousand of them †. Varro, cited by Augustine, has the same number of them ‡. Every thing had its peculiar deity, the cities, fields, houses, families, edifices, gates, nuptial chambers, marriages, births, deaths, fepulchres, wheat, trees, gardens, the heavens, the earth, rivers, fountains, woods, the fea, and hell itself: every thing was made up of Gods. 2dly, Among these there were many guilty of abominable crimes, of adultery, fodomy, rape, and all manner of debauchery. Cicero owns this ||, That the most absurd

* Judeus licet & porcinum numen adoret.

† Ερορών lib. 1. ver. 252.

Τεὶς γὰρ μύςιοι ἐσὶν ἐπὶ χθονὶ πελυβοτέρη Α θάναβοι ζηνὸς, φύλακες ϿνηΙῶν ἀνθρώπων. "Οι ρα φυλάσσεσίν τε δίκας κὶ χέβλια ἔργα.

The same in English.

Three Myriads of immortal Gods there be Upon the fruitful Earth, of Jove's great Progeny; Who Mortals keep, the Laws observe, and wicked Works do see.

‡ De Civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 5, 6.

| Cicero de Natura Deorum, lib. 1. §. 42. Nec enim multò absurdiora sunt ea, qua poetarum vocibus susa, ipsă suavitate nocuerunt: qui cri instammatos, co libidine surentes, induxerunt Deos: seceruntque ut eorum bella, pugnas, pralia, vulnera videremus: odia praterea, dissidia, discordias, ortus, interitus, querelas, lamentationes, essusa in omni intemperantia libidines, adulteria, vincula, cum humano genere concubitus, mortalesque ex immortali procreatos.

VOL. I.

things are said by the poets, which do harm even by the pleafantness of their style: for they have introduced Gods instamed with anger, mad with lust, and have made us see their wars, battles, fightings, wounds, their hatred, differences, strivings, their births, deaths, complaints, lamentations, their lusts exceeding in every kind of intemperance; their adulteries, setters, their lying with mankind, and mortals begotten of immortal Gods.

Thirdly, Tho' the Greeks and Romans Suppose their Gods eternal and immortal; yet there was not one of them but had their fathers, mothers, their genealogy, their birth, and in short the circumstances of their whole life published to the world. Thus Jupiter, the chief of their deities, was the Son of Saturn, as Saturn was of Cælus. Yea, there were tombs erected for the greatest part of them. We are told of one Euhemerus, a native of Messina in Sicily, who published the birth and death of all the Gods, taken from authentic inscriptions found in the heathen temples. There was a large extract of that book of Euhemerus in the fixth book of Diodorus Siculus; but that's also now wanting. Perhaps the heathen priests, jealous of their reputation, did suppress this treatise, by castrating the work of Diodorus, and leaving out five books, from the end of the fifth to the beginning of the eleventh. Only there is a fragment thereof transmitted to us by Eusebius *. The primitive fathers have not been wanting to make use of his authority to prove the heathen Gods to have been no more than dead men +. The Heathens themselves look on Euhemerus with a different aspect: Sextus Émpiricus calls him an atheift, and an impious man, and puts him in the same rank with Diagoras and Theodores. Plutarch in his book of Isis and Osiris, says, Euhemerus the Messinese has been the author of those fables he has thought fit to divulge, they not being founded on the least probability of truth. Cicero fays ‡, As to those who say; strong, famous or powerful men after their death came to be Gods, and that these are th:

[★] De Præp. Evang. lib. 2. cap. 2.

⁺ Augustin. de Civ. Dei, lib.4. cap. 7. ‡ De natura Deorum, lib. 1. §. 119. or near the End of that Book.

the same which we worship and pray to, with the highest veneration, are they not void of all religion? Which method was chiefly gone into by Euhemerus, whom our countryman Ennius, beside others, has translated and followed. For by Euhemerus the deaths and burials of the Gods are demonstrated; and therefore 'tis to be doubted if he has confirmed religion, or altogether taken it away. But Ennius had a more favourable fentiment of him, because he not only embraced his opinion, but also translated his history of the Gods into Latin; as appears from that testimony of Cicero we have just now cited, and by Lastantius, who says the same*. It seems surprising that the Pagan writers should be so incensed against Eubemerus, for giving account of the lives of their Gods, who were but men; when the Theogony of Hesiod, the works of Homer, and generally of all the poets, does narrate their births, lives, and genealogies, which cannot be appropriated to any thing else but men. Manilius affures us +, That the poets by their verses have turned the whole heavens into a fable. And Cicero himself, who is so angry with Euhemerus, does confess ‡, That the whole heavens are filled with mankind; that if we fearch into ancient things, and into what the writers in Greece have recorded, we may find that the very chief deities, the majorum gentium Dii, have gone from this earth unto heaven; their sepulchres are shown in Greece, which they who are initiated into these mysteries ought to remember. Alexander the Great wrote out of Egypt to his mother, that even the Gods of the higher rank, Jupiter, Juno, Saturn, &c. were men, and that this fecret was laid open to him by Leo the great priest of the facred things in Egypt, desiring the letter to be burnt after it revealed this to her \parallel . But I shall speak afterward of the absurdities of heathenism in a chapter by itself.

Fourthly,

^{*} De falsa religione, lib. 1. cap. 11.

[†] Astronomicon, lib. 2. ver. 37. Quorum carminibus nihil est nisi fabula cælum.

[‡] Tusc. quæst. lib. 1. §. 28, 29. Totum propè cœlum nonne humane genere completum est?

^{||} Apud Augustin. de Civ. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 5.

Fourthly, I remark that the Greeks, and after them the Romans, borrowed a great part, not only of their learning, but also of their superstition, from the Egyptians and other eastern nations. Beside what has been already observed *, we may further take notice, that Abraham, and some of the Patriarchs, especially Joseph, having occasion to reside some time in Egypt, did probably leave fome tincture of divine truths among them, which, by frequent commerce with the Jews, they might, if they to inclined, further improve; especially after the bible was translated by the LXX Interpreters, and laid up in the Alexandrian library, in the reign of Ptolemæus Philadelphus. Plato, the famous Athenian philosopher, who came nearest to the truth in divine matters of any of the heathen, having in his travels to the East conversed with the Jews, for the improvement of his knowledge +, and got some insight into the writings of Moses, and the other facred books, he learned many things from them, which others of his profession could not attain to; and therefore he is faid by Numenius ‡ to be none other than Moses speaking Greek.

But of people, especially those who live without God in the world, are more ready to learn evil than good: and it seems pretty plain from the Greek heathenish authors, which I shall name, that they learned much of their idolatry and superstition, with the sables about it, from the East. Diodorus Siculus, who wrote in the time of Julius and Augustus Casars at Rome, and travelled over a great part of the world, especially Egypt, to make his history more compleat and exact, and therefore may be credited that he would not lye to the prejudice of his own cause, says, The priests of Egypt sell in their sacred commentaries, that Orpheus, Musaus, Melampus, Dædalus, the Poet Homer, Lycurgus the Spartan, Solon the Athenian, Plato the Philosopher, Pythagoras the Samian, Eudoxus the Mathematician, Democritus the Abderite, and Oenopides Chius came to them; they give Signs of the whole by images and names, taken from works and places, and demonstrations from each of their professions, whereby they prove that all those things for which the Greeks were remarkable, were borrowed from Egypt. Orpheus took all his mystical rites, and the Orgia or Feasts celebrated about them, from thence, and his whole fable about hell, the ceremonies of initiation to Ofiris and Bacchus are the same; and those of Isis and Ceres, the they differ in name, yet they plainly agree. Many other proofs of this affertion Diodorus gives, even to the end of his first book. Herodote is of the same opinion. Plutarch contradicts him, upon this flender reason, That neither Homer, Hesiod nor Pindar, nor some other ancient poets mention it *. Yet in my opinion the same Plutarch, in another place, goes into the same fentiments; for he fays +, So great was the piety of the Egyptian philosophy about things divine, which is also confirmed by the most learned among the Greeks, as Solon, Thales, Plato, Eudoxus, and as some say, even Lycurgus, going to Egypt, and conversing with the priests, of which they say that Eudoxus was the auditor of Chonupheus the priest of Memphis, Solon of Sonchis priest of Sais, and Pythagoras of Oenupheus priest of Heliopolis. 'Tis also highly probable, that Greece, being inhabited by Colonies from diverse nations, did borrow from every one of these some part of their religious ceremonies. The Thebans being descended from the Phenicians, retained a great part of their superstition, and the Argives are thought to have been instructed in the Egyptian religion by Danaus and his fuccessors; beside several kinds of superstition their great men learned by travels and commerce into other nations. So afraid were the Athenians of neglecting any ceremony they had heard of, that the Apostle Paul tells us, they had erected an altar to an unknown God.

^{*} See Pag. 49. † Josephus contra Appionem, lib. 2. † Suidas in Νεμηνί . Clemens Alexandr. Strom. 1. β Bibl. Hift. lib. 1. cap. 96.

Fiftbly, The wifer fort of the heathens being ashamed of the extravagant absurdities in their religion, have contrived many ways to palliate the matter. They alledge three forts of divinity, $\mu\nu\theta\iota\kappa\dot{n}$, $\rho\nu\sigma\iota\kappa\dot{n}$, and $\pi\rho\lambda\iota\tau\iota\kappa\dot{n}$, that is, fabulous, physical and political. The first is the divinity of their poets, the second of their philosophers, and the third of their priests. The first, as it is monstrous and abominable, is rejected by the wifest of the heathen. Varro owns*, that they ascribe such things to the Gods, as are not to be said of the vilest men. The second fort is the divinity of the philosophers, which tho' Varro did not altogether disapprove, yet he represents it as dangerous, and would have it confined to schools, because they take a liberty of difputing concerning the nature of the Gods, and contradict many things received for undeniable truths among the people. The third fort of their divinity was that used among the priests and the people, according to their worship received and practised in their temples. The wifer fort of the heathens have laboured hard to retrench that part of the divinity of the poets, which appeared so abominable to the world, they having represented their fictions in base shapes. Cicero loudly complains of it +, faying, Their way of contriving feigned Gods had begotten false opinions, turbulent errors and superstitions, like old wives fables; for the figure of their Gods, their age, cloathing and dressing are made known; their alliances, marriages, affinities, and every thing resembling human weakness. For they are brought in as men disturbed by passion; we hear of their lusts, sickness, anger; yea, as the fables tell us, the Gods bave not wanted wars and battles, not only in Homer, where the Gods defended armies contrary to one another, but also they have had their own wars with the Titans and Giants. These things, says he, are both foolishly said and believed, and are full of levity and madness. But the excuse is frivolous; there is no difference between their best divinity and that of the poets. The Gods of the poets were the very fame, in honour of whom the Greeks and Romans built temples; their worship and service, their mysteries, their scenick games celebrated to their memory, their feasts, &c. all these were sounded on the sables of the poets, and the representations they made of the Gods. The mysterious rites of Ceres, for instance, ^{*} Apud Augustinum de Civitate Dei, lib. 6. cap. 5.

^{*} Of the malice of Herodote.

⁴ Of Isis and Osiris, in his Morals, pag. m. 1291.

[†] De Natura Deorum, lib. 2. S. 70. Hac & creduntur & dieuntur sultissime, & plena sunt sutilitatis & summa levitatis.

at which none but women were to be present, had their foundation in what had been said by the poets of the rape of Proserpine by Pluto. The priests of the Goddess Cybele were eunuchs, by reason of the story of the amours of Cybele with Atys, and the hard sate that happened to that young man, to have his genitals cut off by the jealous Goddess. St. Austin, in his books de civitate Dei, gives a hundred instances of that kind, to shew the divinity of the poets, that exposed the Heathens to the resentment of the Christians, was the same that was practised in their Temples, and maintained in their Religion.

They made use of another pretence for palliating the enormity of their divinity, that their physiology, or natural philosophy, lay couched under that veil, and that Orpheus, Linus, Hesiod, and Homer, did represent the affairs of nature under these riddles. Thus Plutarch explained whatever he judged enormous in the divinity of the Egyptians †. But this does not justify the monstrous tenets of the Heathen; for instead of meeting with one thing, the true sense whereof may be applicable to some natural Phænomenon, there are an hundred that will not admit of such an interpretation. I would ask by what kind of allegory they can explain all we meet with in the poets, concerning the genealogies of their Gods, their Adulteries, Incests, Rapes, Drunkenness, Insolence, and a thousand things of that kind?

For further justifying the heathen theology, 'tis alledged, that in effect the heathens owned no more but one God, all their different deities being only the attributes and actions of one and the same. The divine virtue extended all over the universe, is called Jupiter in Heaven, Juno in the Air, Neptune in the Sea, Cybele on the Earth, and Pluto in the subterranean Parts. Many passages in the writings of the Heathen may prove them to have acknowledged no more than one God. Clemens of Alexandria advances*, among many others, a passage Q 4

[†] Treatise of Isis and Osiris.

of Sophocles, cited by Hecatæus the Abderite, who wrote a history of the Jews that's now lost, where the unity of God is expressed in very convincing terms. He says, Certainly there is only one God, who has made heaven and earth, the tempestuous sea, and turbulent winds: But we miserable mortals have turned away our hearts, by erecting statues to the Gods, of stone, brass, gold, and ivory, to whom we facrifice, and confecrate festival days; there is the whole aim of our piety. In the same book he quotes a passage out of Xenophanes the Colophonian, saying, The sovereign God of us, and of them in heaven, is one, hearing refemblance to mankind, either in body or in mind. Lactantius fays, Pythagoras unum Deum confitetur, dicens incorporalem esse mentem +; i.e. Pythagoras confesses there is one God, whose mind is incorporeal or spiritual. The same author fays, that Pythagoras gives this definition of a Deity; God is a spirit, diffused and passing through the whole of nature, and all parts of the world, from whom all creatures have their life ‡. Virgil speaks to the same purpose ||, and Cicero expresses his thoughts thus [*]; We cannot conceive of God otherwise, than of a mind that is loofe and free from all composition with mortals, perceiving and moving all things. These authors had certainly some notion of the unity of God. Plato frequently calls God [+] To dy, the One-Being, and Inulous of the Creator of the world; and fays, this one Being is the supreme governour of men, and the fovereign of all those called inferiour Gods. Socrates, Plato's master, was put to death, for having scoffed at the heathen Gods: yet the Delphic Oracle declared him the wifest of mankind. The same doctrine was taught by Proclus, Jamblichus, Hierocles, and other Platonics, in the first ages of the Christian Church:

De falsa religione, lib. 1. cap. 5. operum Lactantii, pag. m. 20.

[†] De ira Dei, cap. 11. operum pag. m. 704.

^{||} Georg. lib. 4. ver. 221, &c.

Deum namque ire per omnes Terrasque, tractusque maris, cœlumque prosundum. Hinc pecudes, armenta, viros, genus omne ferarum, Quemque sibi tenues nascentem arcesser vitas.

^[*] De consolatione.

^[+] In Parmenide, in Timwo, in Epimenide, &c.

Church: But they were of the Christian School at Alexandria, where they had fucked in some of these first principles of Religion with their philosophy, as has been formerly proved . Seneca also fays, That the several names appropriated to the Deities, were only different names of the same God, using his power in different ways +. What Plutarch says concerning Thebes, a city of Egypt, is remarkable ‡, That all Egypt paid a certain tax, laid on by the priests to defray the charges expended upon the images of those creatures, that were worshipped in their temples; but the Thebans would not pay that tribute, because it was their opinion, that nothing but what was immortal could be a God. The inscription also that he speaks of, that was upon the statue of Minerva at Sais, deserves our notice ||, I am every thing that has been, that is now, and ever will be. And any body, who with attention reads that treatise in Plutarch's morals, entitled, What signifies the word ef, engraven over the temple at Delphi? will find frequent affertions, That God is one; that he alone is; that he never had a beginning by generation, nor will have an end by corrustion. Ei Ev, thou art one, God alone is, Ei, that is to fay, thou art, giving a good testimony in his behalf, that in him there is never any change or mutation, &c. This entirely destroys the plurality of Gods. The words of Pliny against images of the Deity, and the plurality of Gods, are very plain: you have them at the foot of the page [].

After all these proofs, and others that might be adduced, there remains no ground to doubt but some of the Heathens had a little knowledge of the unity of God. Which truth discovered its lustre even amidst these dark times.

^{*} See pag. 49.

⁺ De beneficiis, lib. 4. cap. 8. operum pag. m. 33.

[‡] Of Isis and Osiris.

| Ibidem.

^[*] Naturalis Hist. lib. 2. cap. 7. Quapropter effigiem Dei formamque quarere, imbecillitatis humana reor. Quisquis est Deus (si modo est alius) & quacunque in parte, totus est sensus, totus visus, totus auditus, totus anima, totus animi, totus sini. Innumeros quidem credere atque etiam ex virtutibus viriisque hominum, ut Pudicitiam, Concordiam, Mentem, Spem, Honorem, Clementiam, Fidem, aut (ut Democrito plasnit) duos omnino, Panam & Benesicium, majorem ad socordiam accedit.

times, and is a proof of the truth of the Christian Religion, and that the fundamental principles thereof are agreeable to the light of nature; but is of no weight to justify the divinity of the Heathen. For this point was confined to a small number of the wifer fort, who had improved reason beyond the vulgar, and searched the true nature of things, and were therefore sensible of the absurdities of their Religion, concerning the multiplicity of Gods. But the devotion of the generality did, in effect, extend to all the superstitious Deities; and fince they made Gods of the World, and its feveral parts, the Sun, Moon, Earth, and Elements, they did also worship them as distinct Deities; for the Sun cannot be the Moon or the Earth. I shall afterward more particularly discover the vanity and wickedness of the Heathenish Religion: what has been faid, is sufficient at this time.

These things being premised, I may discourse more briefly of the Idolatry of the Greeks and Romans, fince any body who pleases may have an account of it by the ancient Mythic writers, Palæphatus, Phornutus, Apollodorus, &c. and by abundance of modern authors, who have wrote the Greek and Roman antiquities.

Tho' the number of the Deities worshipped in Greece was incredible, (we have already heard that * Hesiod reckons three Myriads, or 30000 of them) yet they owned but twelve principal Gods, viz. Jupiter, Saturn, Bacchus, Apollo, Mars, Minerva, Diana, Venus, Juno, Geres, Mercurius, and Vulcan. Hence their altar was called Βωμός των δώδεκα θέων, the Altar of the twelve Gods. Indeed Neptune, Pluto, Proserpina, and some others, were of no less esteem among them. These Deities they worshipped, and by them they used to swear. They made also Gods of the passions, of accidents, and feveral creatures.

Their chief God, or rather Idol, was Jupiter, whom they called father and king of Gods; him they owned as their deliverer, counfellor, and defender of their towns: yet their poet Homer describes him as an adulterer, makes Chap. 2. Of the Idolatry of the Greeks.

235

makes him undergo hardships, to be bound till Thetis loosed him, to be false in his promises to Agamemnon, a laughing-stock to Juno and Minerva, a slave to lust, and subject to sleep.

Saturn was a cruel God, who devoured his children, and could not be pacified but by facrificing infants. In honour of him they kept a feast called $K\rho o \nu i \alpha$, or Saturnalia, as did afterwards the Romans. They worshipped him bare-headed, but other Deities with their heads covered. He was bound by Jupiter for injustice, and thrust down to hell; yet they held his government happy, and that under him was the golden age. He found out the use of the scythe or pruning-hook, with which he was painted. He taught the Italians husbandry: hence Italy was called Saturnia, the land of Saturn.

Another Deity of theirs was Bacchus, or Liber, called by the Greeks Lyœus, Dionysius, Bromius, &c. He was sometimes represented as a man, sometimes as a bull, sometimes as a goat, to shew the different disposition of drunkards. They called him dispose, twice born, first of Semele, then of Jupiter. He was crowned with ivy, his Feasts or Bacchanals were full of disorder, riot, im-modesty, and madness.

A fourth Deity was Apollo, Phæbus, or the Sun. They made him God of shepherds, they armed him with a silver bow, and therefore Homer calls him ἀργυρότοξος. They made him the author of divinations. His oracles were famous every where. They that died suddenly, were said to be killed by him. They made him preside over musick and physick; and therefore he was called Areξίκακος and Aποτρόπαιος, that is, deliverer from evil. He had a rich temple at Delphos, beautisted with a great deal of gold, and therefore called by Pindar πολύχρυσος, and from his golden bow he was named χρυσότοξος. He superintended the citharon, and Mercury the harp: they were both worshipped at one altar.

Their fifth Deity was Mars the God of war. For his hard heart, his armour, and brazen face, he was called by the Greeks XÁREOG. He was the swiftest of the heathen Gods, yet was over-reached by Vulcan the slowest; to let us see that strength is oft overcome by policy. He had his intrigues with Venus: military men have their own amours. He is joined with Minerva: arts and arms do meet together. He was a great God among the Greeks, and greater among the Romans. To him they consecrated feasts and divers temples, not only as their tutelar God, but as father of Romulus their sounder. He is called by the poets inconstant, mutable, salse, treacherous. Miserable is the country where he reigns: his greatest enemies are Jupiter and Minerva, peaceable princes, and wise counsellors.

Minerva was the chief Goddess of Athens. Her festivals were called Panathen a, and her chief temple Panthenium, or Panathen aum. From her perpetual celibacy, she was called $\Pi a \rho \theta \dot{\epsilon} vos$, a Virgin. She has the next place to Jupiter, and wears his arms the Ægis, to shew that kings should not be without wise men about them. When she came out of Jupiter's brain, she made a noise, brandishing her spear, as the sable says, at which mortals were afraid. She had her Palladum at Athens, as well as at Troy, and at Rome feveral temples.

Diana was the fifter of Apollo: she was worshipped by the Greeks in the habit of a woman, armed with bow and arrows, and also by the Romans. To her they erected temples, the chiefest whereof was on the Aventine hill. She is called by Pindar in Tooo'a, the horsedriver. By her they understood the Moon, to which they affigned horses, to fignify her motion. She had also a golden chariot drawn by white hinds. She was represented with a torch in her hand, as Hecate is always, because she and Hecate are all one, and she was also the same with Proserpine, and is called Triformis, from the Moon's three different lights. She was a cruel Goddefs. who would not be fatisfied without human victims. In Arcadia she was covered with a hind's skin, with a torch in one hand, and two ferpents in the other, and on her shoulders a bow and quiver.

Venus was the Goddess of love and pleasures, because of her extraordinary beauty. Her chariot was drawn by swans and pidgeons, lascivious birds. She was adored at Amathus, Cythera, and Paphos, pleasant mountains in the isle of Cyprus, whence she is designed. Tacitus* hath a fine description of her temple at Paphos. She had feveral children, as Hymenæus, the God of marriages. The three Graces were her daughters that kept her company. She was mother of two Cupids, Gods of love; the one was honest, the other presided over unlawful pleasures. He had wings on his back, and a quiver full of sharp burning arrows. The infamous Priapus owned her for his mother. She was had in honour as much at Rome as in Greece, as being the mother of Eneas, from whom the Romans deduced their original; and therefore they honoured her with many temples, and she was worshipped chiefly by the women. She was crowned with myrtle and roses; and the fable fays, she was begot of fea-froth. All these do express the qualities of love.

Mercury was also adored by the Greeks. Him they called the fon of Jupiter and Maia, daughter of Atlas, who bears up the heavens with his shoulders. He was faid to be born in the mountain Cyllene in Arcadia. His ordinary office was ambassador and interpreter of the Gods. In this quality he had wings at his heels, and at his head, and in his hand a Caduceus, which was a rod with two ferpents twifting their tails about it, in token of peace and amity. 'Tis conceived by some +, that Mercury is the discourse which interprets our mind and thought; it flies as he did. He had one fon by Venus his fister: the child was faid to be an hermaphrodite; who, as the fable fays, happened to meet with the nymph Salmacis at a fountain, and the Gods, at her earnest request, made of their bodies but one, in such a manner, as both fexes were preferved intire. By this the poets give us to understand the union that should be between married persons; they ought to be one body and one heart. Mercury was worshipped as the God of music and merchandising. He had the charge of wrestlers, and was called Eyarwing. He was faid to keep the doors from thieves, and was therefore called $\Pi\rho o = \pi \dot{\nu} \lambda \alpha \iota o c$, and from the invention of four useful arts was called $\tau \epsilon \tau \rho \dot{\alpha} \Gamma \omega \nu o c$, four square; so was his statue. He was a notable thief; he stole from Jupiter, his scepter; form Neptune, his trident; from Mars, his fword; and from Vulcan, his tongs. Some very learned Men have found great mysteries in this Mercury. Huetius makes him the same with Moses*. No wonder, for he makes almost all the heathen fables to fignify Moses. Bochart holds him to be Canaan the fon of Cham +. Hulfius compares him with Melchisedeck, or with Enoch translated to heaven ||. And Peter Van Sarn + has a learned differtation, where he compares Mercury with what is written of the angel of the covenant in the Old Testament. For my part, I am out of conceit with these farfetched resemblances, and am particularly displeased with the last. I am humbly of opinion, that learned men may bestow their time and pains to better purpose, than to compare what the Scriptures fay of the Son of God, with that which the fables of the heathens fay concerning the Devil.

^{*} Tacitus Hist. lib. 2. cap. 3. † Galtruchius's History of the Heathen Gods, pag. 48.

Vulcan, the fon of Jupiter and Juno, was another of their Deities. He, for his deformity, was kicked out of heaven, and falling into the ifle of Lemnos, he became lame, and was there nourished by Eurymone, the daughter of Oceanus and Tethys. In this isle 'tis said he had his shop. The Cyclops were his servants. There he is said to make thunder-bolts for Jupiter, and arms for the Gods when they fought against the giants. He married Venus: when he found her guilty of adultery with Mars, he tied both together with iron chains, and made the Gods laugh at them. He was worshipped in the form of a lame man, with a blue cap; to fignify the fire, whereof he was God. In his facrifices a torch was lighted, and delivered from one to another; to fignify, fays Alexander Ross , the ^{*} Demon. Evang. Prop. 4. cap. 4. §. 2. + Phaleg. lib. 1. cap. 2.

^{||} Pag. 213, 215.— ‡ Bibliotheca Historico-Philologico-Theologica. Classis quintæ fasciculus primus, pag. 203, ad 212. Printed 1721.

 Pansebeia, pag. 139.

Chap.2. Of the Idolatry of the Greeks. 239 the torch of our life is imparted from father to fon by generation. At Rome, Romulus built his temple without the city, because Mars his co-rival had a temple within the fame.

Juno, according to the poets, was the daughter of Saturn and Ops, the fifter and wife of Jupiter, the Goddefs of kingdoms and riches, having command over marriages and child-bearing, and therefore was called Pronuba, and Lucina. She brought forth Hebe, Goddess of youth, and advanced her so far into favour with Jupiter, that she always poured forth to him nectar to drink, 'till dispatched by Ganymedes. She was offended with Jupiter, when he brought forth Minerva out of his own brain, without her affistance. She entertained in her service a fellow full of eyes, called Argus, to obferve and relate to her the base actions of her husband. When part of Argus's eyes were fast asleep, the rest were awake. Jupiter being displeased with this watchful spy, fent Mercury to lull him afleep with his pipe, and kill him; as he did. Juno grieved at this, changed her dead fervant into a peacock, as the fable fays, which shews yet in its feathers the great number of Argus's eyes. This Goddess was worshipped at Corinth in the habit of a queen, with a crown on her head, on which were carved the Graces and the Hours. She fat on a throne of gold and white ivory, having in one hand a pomegranate, and in the other a scepter, with an owl on the top of it. In some Grecian temples her image was drawn by peacocks. At Argos she was worshipped with vine-branches about her, treading on a lion's skin, in contempt of Bacchus and Hercules, Jupiter's two bastards. Her sacrifices in Greece were hecatombs. At Rome she was honoured with divers names, temples, and facrifices. The calends of every month were dedicated to her, and her folemnities kept in February.

Ceres, another daughter of Saturn and Ops, defirous to find her daughter, whom Pluto took away, lighted two torches upon mount Ætna, refolving to feek her night and day through all the earth, and coming to King Eleusis's court in Attica, and having offered to nurse his fon Triptolemus; to render him immortal, she fed him in the day-time with divine milk, and in the nighttime hid him in the fire. The king watching her one night, observed her putting his child into the fire, and cried out to his own ruin; for the Goddess, enraged at his curiofity, put him immediately to death. But as for Triptolemus, she learned him to till the earth and fow corn; and placing him in a chariot drawn with winged ferpents, fent him over the world to teach men husbandry. Ovid fays , " That Ceres was the first that tilled "the ground, and furnished men with corn for their " food, and by good laws learned them justice, and "the manner to live in fociety. He adds, That Ceres " being obliged to return to Sicily, the nymph Arethu-" sa acquainted her that Pluto had taken away her daughter Proserpina. Whereupon she obtained of " Jupiter, that her daughter should be restored, pro-" vided the had eaten nothing in hell. But Ascalaphus " (son of Acheron, and Orphne one of the infernal " nymphs) informed that he had feen Proferpina gather " a pomegranate in Pluto's gardens, and fuck feven of " the grains; which so offended Ceres, that she changed " him into an owl, the messenger of ill news. " Jupiter, to comfort his fifter, agreed that she might " enjoy her daughter fix months in heaven, and that " fhe should be the other fix with her husband in hell." Paulanias makes mention + of an altar, "where the " fruit of trees, honey, wool, and other things of this "kind were offered to her, but never any wine." Virgil | feems to take Bacchus for the Sun, and Ceres for the Moon. Others take Ceres for the Earth. She was reprefented in a chariot drawn by dragons, holding peacock-heads in one hand, and a burning torch in the other, with a trefs of corn upon her head. The fecret or mystical facrifices of Ceres, called Eleusinia sacra, were ^{} Ovid. Metamorph. lib. 5. fab. 6, 7, 8. + In Arcadicis. || Georg. lib. 1. ver. 5, 6, 7.

—— Vos, 6 clarissima mundi

Lumina, labentem colo qua ducitis annum,

Liber & alma Ceres.——

not to be divulged; profane persons, as then called, were not admitted to them; the priest going before, uttered these words, εκὰς εκὰς ὅστις ἀλιτρὸς. The Roman priests proclaimed the same in their language, Procul, O procul este profani*! The Arcadians did honour Ceres and Proserpina, by keeping sires continually burning in their temples. She was worshipped at Rome, as well as in Greece, where she had her priests and temples, and great solemnities in April, called Ludi Cereales.

Beside these already named, the Greeks worshipped many other sabulous deities; as Esculapius for physic, and Hercules, whose twelve labours are famous among the poets. Julian, called the apostate, says of him †, Hercules, when he is now gone wholly to his father Jupiter, can more easily take care of our affairs, than when he was cloathed with slesh, and educated among men. Pan was the god of shepherds. They had a great number of deities of the earth, as Vesta, Ops, Cybele, Rhea, Tellus, Pales, Flora, Fauna, Proserpina, &c. and of the sea, as Neptune the brother of Jupiter, called by the Greeks Ποσειδων, who being driven out of heaven for conspiring against Jupiter, is said by the poets to have built the walls of Troy, and to have had a contest with Minerva about giving a name to the city of Athens. Striking the ground with his trident in anger, a horse came forth, for which reason they offer'd him that animal. With him were Nereus, Glaucus, Proteus, Triton, Oceanus, Thetis, and other deities of the fea. Pluto, another brother of Jupiter, had hell for his share; he was represented in a chariot drawn by four black horses, with a bunch of keys in his hand, intimating that death is in his custody. With Pluto they had Proserpina, Plutus, Charon, Cerberus, Acheron, and the rest of the infernal deities. Abundance of foolish fables may be had concerning all these, and the rest of the heathen gods and heroes, in Julius Hyginus, Apollodori Bibliotheca de Deorum Origine, in Homer's Ilias and Odyssea, Hesiod's Theogonia, Ovid's Metamorphoses, Pausanias, and others among the ancients: and in Stephanus, Lloyd and Moreri's dictionaries, Galtruchius's hiftory of the heathen gods, Dr. King's hiftorical account of the heathen gods and heroes, of which there are many editions, and others among the moderns. As to the origin of these sables, I incline not to make any peremptory conclusion. Only it seems most probable, that Cham, being the patron and promoter of idolatry after the flood, many of these same from stories transmitted by uncertain tradition concerning him, and his samily and offspring; which agrees with the opinion Dr. Cumberland prosecutes more fully in his Phenician history. But the heathens knowing little of the origin of these stories, every age added to the sable, in which the Greek and Latin poets were very fruitful, prompted by Satan to debauch the morals of mankind. And this is the common sate of things that depend only upon tradition.

^{*} Aneid. 6. ver. 258. † Juliani operum, Oratio 5. pag. m. 167. Vol. I. R

242 Of the Idolatry of the Romans.

I proceed now to confider the idolatry of the ancient Romans, which spread itself far and near, before the coming of our Redeemer to destroy the works of the devil. Numa Pompilius, the second king of Rome, taught them the rites of their idol-worship; he left no other religion behind him at his death, than the very fame heathenism which he found at Rome on his first coming thither; only he made laws to regulate that fcum and refuse of divers nations and cities gathered there, both as to religion and civil government. And really the old Roman idolatry was no other than the Greek heathenism, even the same which was practised in Greece, and in all those countries which were planted with colonies from thence, as almost all Italy was at that time; and therefore the Romans, as well as the rest of the cities in Italy, looked on Delphos as a principal place of their worship with the same veneration that the Greeks did, and had frequent recourse thither on religious accounts, as the Roman histories on many occasions acquaint us. This religion Numa, while he lived among the Sabines, being accurately verfed in, and a diligent practifer thereof, on his coming to Rome, finding the Romans all out of order, for

for in the time of Romulus they minded little else but fighting, he in structed them in it, and framed several rules and conflicutions for the more regular practice thereof. All which he pretended he had received from the Goddess Egeria, that the barbarous people, as Florus fpeaks *, might the better receive them. Particularly Numa taught the Romans to worship their gods, by offering corn and cakes besprinkled with salt; to erect temples, but no images, thinking it absurd and impossible to represent that incomprehensible power by outward shapes and figures. Many years after that, Tarquinius Priscus taught them, according to the Grecian manners to fet up images to represent their gods. Varro, as cited by Augustine, says +, The ancient Romans, for more than 170 years, worshipped the gods without images; and if they had done so still, the gods might have been served with greater purity, which he proves by the example of Judea, and concludes, that those who first brought in images into the worship of the gods, took away the fear due to them, and led people into error. Numa also appointed the vestal virgins ||, who were to remain in that state 30 years; the first ten they were learners, the next ten they practifed in their office, and the third ten years they were teachers of the novices. If they committed whoredom, they were burned or buried alive. He inflituted likewise many of the festival days, lucky and unlucky times. He divided the year into twelve months, and appointed the priefts of Mars called Salii. But of their priests, divinations, and other rites of their worship, I shall speak afterward, and in the mean time shall consider first the object of their idolatry.

The Heathen Romans worshipped the same deities as the Greeks, and had the same sables about them; which therefore need not be again repeated. Only the Romans by degrees increased the Litany of their gods to a greater number. Their chief idols were twenty, viz. Jupiter the god of thunder, Juno of riches, Venus of beauty, Alinerva of wisdom, Vesta of the earth, Ceres of corn, Diana of hunting, Mars of war, Mercury of eloquence, Vulcan of fire, Apollo of physic, Nestune of the sea, Janus of husbandry, Saturn of time, Plute of hell, Bacchus of wine, Tellus of feeds, Genius of nativities, the Sun, and the Moon, (tho' Macrobius in his Saturnalia contends, that under most of these the Sun is to be underflood.) And beside these they worshipped many deities of lesser note, as Bellona the goddess of war, Victoria of victory, Nemesis of revenge, Cupid of Love, the Charites or three Graces, the tutclar Gods, the Lares or houshold gods, the three Parca, or fatal fifters, Clotho, Lachefis, and Atropos, as prefiding over deftinies; the Furiæ or Eumenides, Alecto, Tisiphone and Megiera, as ordering punishments, and the goddess of Fortune. All these were called Dii minorum gentium, the gods of lesser note. There were others they called Indigetes. These were men and women, who for their supposed merits were canonized and worshipped; as Hercules, Faunus, Evander, Carmenta, Castor and Pollux, Æsculapius, Romulus, &c. Yea, not only men supposed virtuous, but even the Virtues themselves were deified. These had their temples, facrifices, and festivals; as Vertue, Honour, Piety, Chastity, Peace, Concord, Quietness, Liberty, Safety, and Felicity. Lucullus, who flourished about the 683d year after the building of Rome, erected a temple to the last of these, of which Augustine says +, Why was not Felicity sooner worshipped? Why did not Romulus, when he built a city, which he defired to be happy, erect a temple to her? fince the alone could there the shortest way for amanto be happy. They had also inferior deities, whose merits deserved no veneration. These they called Semones, as it were Semibomines, half men, fuch as Priatus, Vertumnus, Hippona, Nania. At the fame rate old wives and nurses became authors of a multitude of deities. They invented Lucina to give eafy labour, Opis to receive the child, Levana that took him up, Vagitanus who opened his mouth to weep, Curina who guarded the cradle, the Carmentes who read the deftiny, Rumina who made him fuck, Educa and Potina, who made him eat and drink; and a great many many more of that fort, which Augustine speaks of *. They had gods of all kinds, as Somnus, Dolor, Pavor, Sleep, Grief, Fear, Money, Wisdom, &c. 'Tis well that they have not left us the whole dictionary full of them? fome learned authors have given us a pretty large catalogue of them +.

R 2

^{*} Lib. 1. cap. 2. + De civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 31. | Florus, lib. 1. cap. 2.

Besides, the country people had their Deities peculiar to their affairs, as Rubigus of smut, Stercutius of dung, Bubona of oxen, Hippona of horses, Mellona of honey, Pomona of fruit, Pales of fodder, Flora of flowers, Terminus of bounds, Pan of shepherds, Sylvanus of fields and woods, Priapus of feeds and gardens; yea, Cleacina of finks and privies, as Augustine fays, Non numina colendorum, sed crimina colentium, that is, Not Gods to be worshipped, but the scandal of the worshippers ||. Who can recount them? As the same learned Father says, Me pudet quod illos non piget t, " I am ashamed of these things that "they are not weary of." So fond and foolish were the Romans in idolatry, that they borrowed Gods of the nations they subdued. Those who could not defend their own country, they adored them as protectors of their vaft empire. Their fables about them were innumerable, as may be feen in Ovid's Metamorthofes, and in all the poets. There was not a conftellation in the heavens, but they had fome fable or other concerning it, as the curious may see by reading Julii Hygini Astronomicon, an author who wrote in the Augustan age. So careful were they, that not any thing should be neglected, that whatever was remarkable in heaven, earth, feas, hills, rivers or fires, was all deified, as Prudentius a christian poet  long ago observed. But even their own poets did not believe R 3

Quicquid humus, pelagus, cœlum mirabile gignit. Id duxêre Deos: colles, freta, flumina, flammas. The fame in English.

What Heaven or Earth, Hills, Rivers, Fires and Seas Of Wonders bear, were all made Deities.

^{*} De civitate Dei, lib.4. cap. 11.

⁺ Vide Andream Beyerum in Additamentis ad Seldenum de Dis Svrispag. m. 150— ad 180. || De civitate Dei, lib.4. onp. 23.

[‡] Ibid. lib. 4. cap. 8.  Libro primo contra Symmachum, ver. 297.

what they wrote upon these subjects. Manilius a heathen, who lived in the fame age with Hyginus, fays *, " The " poets by their verses have turned the heavens into a mere fable." Those who are curious may see plain testimonies from the best heathen authors, how birds, fishes, four-footed beasts, serpents, insects, plants, minerals, trees, &c. were abused to idolatry by the heathen, in the books of the learned Joannes Gerardus Vossius, de origine & progressu idololatriæ +: Tho' in my humble opinion that very learned author feems in that large work, to write a natural history as much as a treatife of idolatry; yet there is a great collection upon both thefe subjects, and also in his 7th and 8th books of the same work, upon all the affections and incidents of a man's life, abused to idolatry, and of the fymbols and emblems whereby their idols were honoured in the last book.

I do not fee that reason or religion does oblige us to moralize the fables of the heathen: the fathers, and ancient writers against the Gentiles, did not use this method. Tho' Natalis Comes, in his mythology, or explication of the fables, Alexander Ross in his Mystagogus Poeticus, and fome others in their writings of the wildom of the ancients, have followed this way, I fee no necessity for it. Few, if any, of the fables, admit a found fense in morality. The Spirit of God in the infpired writings declares, that the gods of the heathen were devils; They facrificed to devils, not to God, Deut. xxxii. 17. They facrificed their sons and daughters to devils, Pial. cvi. 37. The things which the Gentiles facrifice, they facrifice to devils, not unto God, 1 Cor. x. 20. They shall no more offer their facrifices to devils, after whom they have gone a whoring, Levit. xvii. 9. 'Tis then impossible that these diabolical victims, or the romantic tales, that have been forged about them, can admit of a fafe fense. Nay, the fables of the Gentiles concerning their idols, have been promoted among men, to lessen the esteem due to our great

[&]quot; în Astronomico, iib. 2. ver. 37. Querum carminibus nihil est nisi sabula cœlum. + De idololatria, Vol. 2. in 4to, pag. m. 1126,---1272,---1523,---1644, &c. Vol. 3. pag. 173.

great Creator, as was long ago observed by Minutius Felix †. They are nothing but odd and uncouth stories contrived by the enemy of mankind, and delivered by the poets to discredit virtue, and make vice reign with authority: For when the Deities the Gentiles did worship were guilty of such crimes; when those who had power to punish men, were the grand protectors of their vices, they could neither think it shameful nor dangerous to obey their suggestions, and follow their example. By these means the roaring lion, who seeketh whom he may devour, did promote his own kingdom among the blinded nations, and did deface the image of our Creator; and the devils, by pretending to admit into their society, and to the honour of deities, brave men when departed out of this world, as Hercules, Romulus, &c. did encourage others in their service, in hope of the same honours and rewards.

I might now proceed to discourse of the rites of idolatrous worship which were practifed by the Romans and other Gentile nations. In order to this, we may confider, that the knowledge of God does necessarily require of us obedience, worship and respect, which we are bound in justice to render to our Creator, as a Being infinitely excellent, to whom we owe ourselves and all our enjoyments. Religion teaches us to adore God with outward expressions of adoration as well as inward, to make our addresses to him by prayer, as the fountain whence all our good things proceed, to publish his praises, to trust in him, to reverence, fear, serve and obey him in the duties and means of his appointment. But the devils having banished from the world the true knowledge of God, and established themselves in his room, they obliged mankind to adore them, and their statues, instead of God, and usurped by these means the prerogatives of the god-head. To these Dæmons and Idol-deities all publick and private prayers and vows were directed; in honour of them, sestival-days, sacrifices, public and solemn games were instituted, and temples and altars R 4 erected.

erected. This might lead us to enquire into the several parts of worship render'd to the heathen idols; but every writer of the Greek and Roman antiquities being full upon this subject, as not only the large and learned collections of Grævius and Gronovius, Montfaucon's Antiquity explain'd, Rosinus, Dempster, Lilius Gyraldus, and Gerard Vossius*, but even in our own language, Goodwin, Konnet's Roman and Potter's Greek Antiquities, and many others; a few short remarks shall then suffice us.

First, The heathens had temples for their Deities. The Syrians had them before the temple at Jerusalem was erected; for in the book of Judges, Chap. ix. 4. we hear of the house of the God Berith, and Chap. xvi. of the temple of Dagon, where Sampson made sport for the Philistines; And when the ark of God was brought into the house of Dagon, the Idol did fall and was broken in pieces, I Sam. v. The arms of Saul, after his defeat, were brought into the temple of Ashtoreth, I Sam. xxxi. 10. The temple of Diana at Ephelus was one of the wonders of the heathen world; it was feated in a marshy-ground for fear of earthquakes; it was 425 feet in length, 220 in breadth, and 127 stately pillars were in it, each of them the work of a king, who resolved to make his piety and magnificence therein appear. Several other temples were very fumptuous, as that confecrated to Minerva, and that to Mars at Athens, where the judges examined causes of life and death. The Capitol TRome consecrated to Jupiter Imperator, also the temples of Neptune, Vulcan, Saturn. Mars, Æsculapius, Hercules, Vesta, Janus, &c. were all of them magnificent structures, worthy of the Roman grandeur, and especially the Pantheon consecrated to all the Gods. Monf. Jurieu conceives + some of the heathens built their temples near by the model of the house of God at Jerusalem. Thus Lucian, describing the temple of the Syrian Goddess at Hieracolis, says, That it was surrounded with two walls, and two courts, the first next to the first wall, and the other within the second. In these temples were places at the gate, where people washed washed themselves before they went into the temple, and there were officers set at the gate to make aspersions on those who entred. Theodoret informs us *, That when Valentinian followed the Emperor Julian, called the Apostate, into the temple of Fortune, the officers having thrown lustral water upon him, he beat the fellow who had defiled him, being a Christian, with such an aspersion. Before the heathen temples there was a great space called $\Pi \rho \acute{o} \delta \rho o \mu o \varsigma$, a prosane walking-place, where men walked together, and things were sold as in a market; the Greeks call it $\Pi \rho \acute{o} \nu a o \jmath$. There was a great part of the temple, called Cella, in which stood the image of the deity, now called the Choir. Behind all these was the hinder part of the temple $O\pi \iota \sigma \theta \acute{o} \delta o \mu o \varsigma$. The popish churches are much after the same model, and seem very near to imitate the heathen temples.

^{*} De idololatria, lib. 9. per totum. + Hist. des Dogmes, &c. pag. 760. || De Dea Syra, operum Luciani, Tom. 2. pag. 671, & seqq.

Secondly, The principal ornaments of their temples were altars, tables, lamps, statues, and sacrifices: these last being a chief part of their pagan worship, a temple could not be without an altar to offer them upon. Athenœus fays, There was a golden altar at Babylon, upon which none but sucking pigs were sacrificed +. Some of their altars were made of green turfs, as we find in Virgil ||.
But most part of them were of stone or marble. Lucian affirms t, the great altar for sacrifices was without the temple; for to his description of the inside of the altar, he adds, Without is a brazen altar, with feveral statues both of kings and priests. Had the altar been within the temple, the smoak of the sacrifices must immediately have filled it with a thick air, and a noifome fmell. But they had another altar ferving only for perfumes, as we find in Virgil . Tables were common moveables in their temples. These three commonly go together, aræ, foci & mensæ. Cicero says, Iste deorum ignes solennes, mensas, abditos & penetrales socos ^{*} Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 16. + Deipnosophistæ, lib. 9. cap. 18. * Æncid. 12. ver. 118.

In medioque focos & Diis communibus aras Gramineas----‡ De Dea Syra, Tom. 2. pag. 678.

^{} Æneid. 4. ver. 453.

⁻⁻⁻⁻⁻Thuricremis cum dona imponeret aris,

pervertit *; i.e. He has turned to a wrong use the solemn fires of the Gods, their tables and their hidden and sacred hearths. They used to eat at these tables after the sacrifices. Hence the Apostle Paul forbids Christians to sit at meat in the idol temples, I Cor. viii. 10. Lamps and tapers were another ornament of the heathens in their temple-worship, especially on festivals. Therefore Tertullian fays+, Shall we Christians be condemned, because we do not cover our doors with laurels on your festivals? Nor break in on day-light with lamps? -- Who forces a philosopher to swear, or to light vain lamps at noon-day? Lastantius enlarges upon the same subject: He, speaking of the heathen, fays ||, They kill rich fat facrifices to their Gods, as if they were hungry, — they light lamps to them, as if they were in darkness.—— Behold the Sun, the light of the world, and he persuaded God does not need burning tapers, who for the use of the world has created so clear and so glorious a light! -- May he not be thought out of his wits, who to the Creator of light offers candles and tapers? He requires a better light, even a mind enlightned from above, which those who know not God cannot offer. Now had it been the custom of Christians in these times to burn lamps and tapers in their churches, as the papifts do at this day, Tertullian and Lastantius could not have found such fault with the heathens for doing it.

Thirdly, In these temples the heathens had many statues consecrated to their idols. We have already proved that they had no images in the earliest times of idolatry: But it is undeniable that afterward, when their idolatrous worship had made further progress over the world, that statues and images were received. The Minerva of Athens did bear in her buckler the image of the workman who formed it, so artfully wrought, that it was not possible to deface or remove it, without a visible prejudice to the whole piece. The statue of Jupiter Olympius made by Phidias, was 150 cubits high, the head thereof of pure gold, but the body of brass. And there were innumerable more of that kind of curious workmanship.

^{*} In oratione de aruspicum responsis. + Apolog. cap. 35. pag. 45. || Institut. lib.6. cap. 2. | + See pag. 154, & seqq.

So little confidence had the heathens in the Gods they worshipped, that they fastned them with cords when their cities were besieged, lest they should desert their interest, and favour that of their enemies. Thus Curtius says *, "That when Alexander the Great besieged Tyre, the inhabitants bound the statues of Apollo and Hercules, to whose protection they had dedicated their city, with a golden chain, thinking thus to retain their favour."

The Romans had a strange custom in their idol-worship, to advance their emperors after their death, into the number of the Gods. Thus Augustus deified Julius Cæsar, and Tiberius rewarded Augustus with the same honour. The rites of their confecration are at large defcribed by Rosinus + from Dion and Herodian. The sum of the whole is, "The body of the emperor being bu-" ried according to the usual custom, his effigies in wax " was placed at the entry of the palace, fumptuoufly " adorned. The physicians did visit him for seven days, " as if alive, but affixed to his bed. Mean while all the " fenate and nobility were prefent in mourning habits. "When these days were expired, he was held for dead, " and they transported him to a publick place, where "the magistrates quitted their office, and the new empe-" ror afcended an high pulpit, called Roftra, where he " made a funeral oration in honour of the deceased.— " Afterwards they carried the image to the field of " Mars, where a pile of aromatic stuff was erected to " burn it. In the mean time the Roman Gentlemen did " ride round it in order. At last the new emperor with " a torch fet the pile of wood, adorned with spices, in a " flame, and an eagle was difmiffed from the top of it, " which was imagined to carry the foul of this new deity " to heaven. Thus the Apotheosis or Consecration ended, " the people did feast and entertain themselves with all " manner of sports, and the statue of the new deity " was erected in the temple and worshipped." The Church of Rome has many fuch foolish superstitions in the canonization of faints.

Fourthly,

^{*} Lib.4. cap. 3. + Antiq. Rom. lib. 3. cap. 18. pag. m. 128. & feqq.

Fourthly, The heathen Greeks and Romans had many festival solemnities in honour of their Gods. Ovid gives us a great number of them *, tho' half of his Fatts be wanting, where many more were recorded. Lilius Gy-raldus has a long catalogue of them †. I shall name a few. On the the first of January they sent Strenæ, or gifts to their friends. In the Saturnalia the flaves did lord it over their masters; the Agonalia were dedicated to the God of Action, the Carmentalia to Carmenta, Evander's mother. The Roman ladies took a boundless liberty to commit abominable things in the festivals of Venus and Priapus, which we discoursed of in the former part of this chapter. In the days confecrated to Pallas Goddess of war, maids in some places did meet and fight one against another, till some fell dead on the ground. In the feafts called Lupercalia at Rome, the priefts ran naked about the streets, with goat's skins on their hands, because heretofore the Romans did happily recover their beafts, when they ran in this manner after the thieves, who had driven them away. In the festival of Ceres, her worshippers ran up and down with lighted torches in their hands, because she thus ran about the world to feek her daughter Proferpina. This ceremony was only acted by women, who in the temple of Ceres committed a thousand shameful things, where it was not lawful to reveal what was acted at that time, because Ceres did not reveal her fecret, till she heard of her daughter's welfare. Bellonaria were the festivals of Bellona, in which the priefts did offer her their own blood ‡. Juvenilia were appointed by Nero at the first shaving of his beard. But I cannot go through the whole of them. Every idol had some festival or other wherein he was worshipped. You may judge what they were by the sketch we have given. The Church of Rome appears to have multiplied their holy-days after the example of the heathen.

Befides

Seva movet

^{*} In fex Libris Fastorum.

⁺ De Dis Syntagma, cap. 17. pag. 472, & feqq.

Besides the sestivals, the Greeks and Romans had also games and combats inftituted in honour of their Gods. Among the Greeks the Olympic Games were most famous, celebrated in Olympia, a city in the territory of the Piseans. They were faid to be instituted by Hercules, in honour of Jupiter Olympius. The conqueror was rewarded with a crown of the olive-tree. Every fourth year they met upon the place to celebrate these games. Hence proceeds the period of the Olympiads, which is the most famous Epocha of chronology among the heathens, all accounts of time before this being very uncertain among them; and this is commonly reckoned * to coincide in its commencement with the 3174th year after the creation of the world, or the 34th of Uzziah king of Judah. Next after the Olympic, came in the Isthmian games, which were celebrated in the Isthmus of Corinth, to the honour of Neptune. The victors were crowned with garlands of pine-leaves. Lastly, The Nemean games, so called from Nemea, a village and grove betwixt Cleonæ and Phlius. They were celebrated every third year, and were faid to be instituted by Hercules, after his victory over the Nemean lion. The exercises were chariot-races, and others of that kind. The victors were crowned with parfley +.

Tho' from all parts of Greece they crowded to thefe games, yet there was nothing fo fumptuous and stately to be feen there as at Rome, where their Circus, Theatres and Amphitheatres were crouded with innumerable spectators. The champions were ushered in with great pomp, the statues of the Gods, and of the worthies of the empire, were carried before them, then followed a great number of chariots, succeeded by spoils taken from the enemies, and precious jewels and ornaments of the empire. After this train the priefts, augurs and pontifs marched, in order to offer facrifices to some of the deities, according to occasion. The secular games were every hundredth year. The cryer did proclaim they were fuch sports as none alive had seen, or ever would see again.

The

^{*} Vide Alstedii Chronologiam, pag. 32. Helvici Theatrum. pag. 52. + Plutarch's Life of Timeleon.

The Emperor Vespasian built an Amphitheatre of stone, which was finished by his fon Titus, which might hold ninety thousand spectators sitting, and twenty thousand more upon their legs. The chief sport of the amphitheatre was that of gladiators or fencers, who were appointed to divert the people by spilling their own blood; a cruel fervitude invented by the enemy of mankind! The inhumanity was fo great, that some emperors gave a thoufand, others ten thousand fencers, to fight and continue the slaughter to divert the people many days. The chace of wild beafts was one of the most pleasing diversions of the Circus. The Emperor Titus caused 5000 wild beafts to enter the Circus in one day. Sometimes they employed men to encounter lions, tygers, leopards, and fuch terrible beafts, that the spectators might have the pleasure to fee men torn and devoured by them. Many Christians thus fuffered martyrdom in the time of the perfecuting heathen emperors. Sometimes they did show the burning of cities, bloody battles, and other wonderful and cruel spectacles to the people, by certain engines contrived for that purpose. Prodigious expence was bestowed on these games. Even Lucian a Pagan introduces Anacharsis a Barbarian, deriding all these shows, as a piece of unaccountable foolery and madness*. But they were never intirely abolished, till the overthrow of heathenish idolatry, by the Roman Emperors becoming Christians, who suppressed these facrifices to the devil, as unbecoming that piety, clemency and mercy which the Gospel teaches us.

Fifthly, There was a great number of priefts employed in the idol-worship of the heathen temples. The priefts of Mars, called Salii, were the most ancient of that kind among the Romans, being instituted by king Numa † who first taught them the rites of their superstition. The Salii were at first but twelve in number, afterwards they encreased to twenty four. They were chosen out of the Patricii, or men of first rank, in the month of March; they were to dance solemnly with their Ancilia, one one of which, faythey, fell down from heaven. These festival dances were dedicated to Mars. The Romans had also their Augures, who did prophesy by the flying and motion of birds. The soothsayer ascended some eminent place, with the Augural robe upon his back, and in his hand a crooked staff, called Lituus*, with which he limited a certain place in the air, called templum; the birds that did flee within this space, intimating the things defired, were called Præpetes. The other birds, that were confulted by their finging, were called Oscines. The left hand was efteemed unfortunate. It belonged to the office of the augurs, to judge of unufual accidents; as thunders, fire, flames, monsters, voices, inundations, prodigies, &c. and to interpret the mind of the Gods intended by them. It was also the custom of the Romans to divine by little chickens while a feeding. If these pullets did eat nothing, or but flowly, they construed it a dangerous fign. This caused the Roman armies to march, or abide in their camp, as is often observed by Livy and other Historians: yea, it was not lawful to resolve upon any business of importance, till these were consulted. They had also their Aruspices, who took conjectures from the fight of the intrails of the facrifices offered to the Gods. We shall hear afterward, in the fourth chapter of this book, what a struggle the Christian Emperors had to suppress this divining tribe. Indeed forcery and divination is a constant concomitant of Paganism, and a great evidence of the prevailing of the kingdom of darkness. To return, the Romans had also their Triumviri, called Epulones, who had the charge of the folemn feafts, and other Triumviri, who had the charge of the Sibyls books. The Fratres Arvales had the charge of the fields; the Feciales of the wars. There were many other orders of Flamines or priefts, in proportion to the number of their greater Gods. Jupiter's priefts were called D.ales; those of Mars, Martiales; of Quirinus, Quirinales; the Curetes, or Corybantes, were the priests of Cybele. Over all these there was a high-priest, or Rex Sacrificulus, the king of priefts, because in ancient times kings kings did exercise the priestly office. Above them all was the pontifical college, which at first consisted only of eight persons, but Sylla encreased them to sisteen. These were to affist the chief Pontifex or Pope, who had the chief power to direct facrifices, holy-days, priefts, festivals, vestals, vows, funerals, idols, oaths, ceremonies, and whatfoever concerned their Religion. In fhort, he had more power than the kings themselves; for he might afcend the Capitol in his litter, which was not permitted to any other; and whatfoever criminal fled to him, he was that day free from punishment. To what we have faid concerning the Roman priefts, it may be added, that Lucian says, That the priests of the Syrian Goddess + wear white garments, and a bonnet on their head; the high-priest is changed every year, he only wears a purple garment, and a golden tyre upon his bead.

^{*} De Gymnasiis, operum tom. 2. pag. m. 269, & seqq. + Florus, lib. 1. cap. 2.

^{*} Cicero de Divinatione, lib. a. §. 80,

Sixtbly, The Heathens offered many kinds of facrifices to their Deities. They had propitiatory facrifices, to appeale the Gods when offended; impetratory, to ask favours of them; and thank-offerings, when they gave them victories, or did them favours. But they had another end in their facrifices, not known to the Jews, or any who acted by divine appointment; that is, to confult the destiny about things to come. Thus the generals of their armies offered facrifices before an engagement, to confult the Gods concerning the fuccess. was a good omen, when the victim went freely to the altar, and a bad one when it was dragged. Other omens they had from the intrails of the facrifices, from the flying of birds, from their feeding, and many more figns of that kind. Cicero strongly afferts the Being of God and Providence, but folidly confutes the superstitious divinations of his own people . What are lots or divinations? fays he; Nothing else than the throwing of the dice, in which rashness or chance makes a man lucky, not folid counsel. The whole affair is managed by trick and facacy, or is designed for gain, or leading men to superstition and error. In another place, the same eloquent author declares declares his opinion thus ++: How small a part of what is foretold by these divinations is true in fact? Or if it happen to come to pass, what reason can be given for it but chance? King Prusias, when the banished Hannibal did advise him to fight, said he durst not, because the intrails of the victims did forbid: Wilt thou, fays Hannibal, rather trust the heart of a calf, than an old experienced general? As to the matter facrificed, the proper facrifices under the law of Moses were the ox, including the calf and bullock, the sheep, the lamb, the goat, the kid, the pi-geon, and the turtle-dove. But the Heathens had a variety of other victims. When discoursing of Molech, we demonstrated, that upon several occasions they used human facrifices, and that even the polite Greeks and Romans were guilty of this barbarity, which was not taken away till the time of the Emperor Hadrian +: " Plutarch tells ‡ of a misfortune that happened to a vef-" tal virgin, upon which it was ordered by the senate, "that the priefts should consult the Sibylline books, " where they found it portended a great calamity to the " commonwealth; for avoiding whereof, they com-" manded two Greeks and two Gauls to be facrificed to " evil spirits; and by burying them alive in the very " place, to make propitiation to the Gods." Josephus Acosta, in his History of the Indies*, says, "The de-" vils possessed the Americans with this kind of fury to " an incredible degree. When ever the Inca king of " Peru was troubled with any difease, or was concerned " for fuccess in war or other affairs, the Peruvians sa-" crificed ten children from four to fix years of age; and "upon his coronation day they facrificed to the number of 200 children, from four to ten years of age. When the father was fick, his fon was facrificed to the Sun, or "Viriacocha, praying him to be contented with the son, and spare the father." Next to men, the Heathens sacrificed ^{††} Ibid. §. 52.—An tu, inquit, caruncula vitulina mavis quam imperatori veteri credere?  See pag 178, to 186.

⁺ De Dea Syra, operum tom. 2. pag. 679. * De Divinatione, lib. 2. §. 85.

[†] Vide Euseb. de Præp. Evang. lib. 4. cap. 16.

[‡] Roman Questions, Numb. 83.
* Lib. 5. cap. 19
Vol. I. S

crificed bulls, oxen, cows, sheep, and goats. To Ceres they offered a fow +. Plutarch informs us, That a dog was facrificed to Genita Mana, a Demon that prefides over generations ±. And in another place he fays, The Greeks facrificed a dog in all their expiations, and carry a little dog to Proserpina, among other expiatory oblations ||. Tho' the ass be a vile dull creature, yet they facrificed him to Priapus [*]. Plutarch also says [+], That once in the year the borse that won the prize, in the chariot races on December 13th, was facrificed to Mars. The goat, the fleep, the ewe and the lamb, were common facrifices. By the famous history of Socrates's death, we find a cock was facrificed to Æsculapius [#]. Athenœus says [#], That fisher-men offered sacrifices of their fish to Neptune. Beside all these, they offered to their Deities inanimate things, as milk [], wine, oil, frankincense, flowers and fruits. These had all their proper use in facrifices, and honey was made an ingredient in cakes to Bacchus.

As to the ceremonies used in the facrifices, we have an account of them from Dionysius Halicarnassæus [++]. The pomp, says he, being over, the consuls, with the priests, and others consecrated to that purpose, sacrificed in the same manner as with us, (that is in Greece;) for sirst they wash their hands, and purify the vistims with a sprinkling of lustral water. They spread over his head the fruits of the earth, or mola salsa; and having made a prayer, they give the word of command to slay the vistim. Then they strike the facrifice with a great club upon the temples, and others put knives under it, that it may fall upon them.

Then

```
† Ovid. Fastor. lib. 1. ver. 299.
```

Prima Ceres avida gavisa est sanguine porca.

Juvenal. Satyr. 2. ver. 86.

Atque Bonam tenera p!acant abdomine porca.

‡ Roman Questions, Number 52. | Ibid. Numb. 68. | 18 | Ovid. Fastor. lib. 1. ver. 340.

Caditur & rigido custodi ruris asellus.

[+] Roman Questions, Numb. 97.

[#] Plato in Phædone. [||] Deipnosoph. lib. 8.

[] Horat. lib. 2. Epist. 1. ver. 143, 144.

Sylvanum latte piabant
Floribus & vino genium—[++] Antiq. Rom. lib. 7. cap. 72.

Then'tis skinned and cut in pieces, and the best of the intrails and other parts taken cut; which chosen parts are covered with barley-slower, brought unto those who sacrifice, who kindling the fire, laid them through several parts on the altar; and while these are burning, they make an essuion of wine. Apollonius, in the eighth of his Argonautics, explains these ceremonies thus: Then Anicæus struck with a cooper ax the neck of the other ox, and cut off his borns. The ox falling to the ground, the companions cut his throat, and divided him into quarters and tieces, chiefly the sacred legs; and having covered them with fat, put them on the fire: and Jason made the strinkling of the mola falfa.

The learned Peter Jurieu, in the last treatise of his History of the Destrines and Worship of the Church good and evil, gives feveral particulars wherein the Heathens imitate the Jews in their folemn Rites. 'Tis eafy for a man of I arning to multiply parallels; but I fee no neceffity for doing it upon this subject. 'Tis certain, from what we have already observed concerning the matter of their facrifices, and other rites of their superstition, that there was a plain disagreement. 'Tis not to be found among any of the ceremonies of the Heathen, that before the victim was slain, he that offered it laid his hand on the head of the beaft, and confessed his fins, faying, I have sinned, I have done wickedly, I have rebelled and committed fuch fins or crimes; but I repent, and offer this sacrifice for an atonement. Far less had the Heathen the fire coming down from heaven, and confuming the facrifice. This being a token of divine acceptance, they could not have it. Neither had they whole burntofferings, nor did they sprinkle the blood upon the altar and the people; which Lucian unjustly ridicules*. What was all their religious performances, but worship and fervice to the devil? To which they, by their fruitful invention, daily added new superstitions; and the whole was most abominable to a holy God, who is of turer eyes than to behold iniquity.

S 2

Having

^{*} De facrificiis, operum Luciani tom. 1. pag. m. 368.

260 The Idolatry of the Western Nations.

Having explained the Idolatry of the ancient Syrians, Egyptians, Phenicians, Canaanites, Perfians, Greeks and Romans, I shall put a period to this chapter, when I have once given a short hint of the Idols of some ancient Western Nations, who by the Greeks and Romans were called Barbarians. To understand how this detestable superstition was removed since our Redeemer's coming into the world, we must know what it was before his time. In the times of the Old Testament, there was but a little spot of the world, where the true God was worshipped according to his own appointment, even in the land of Canaan. All the rest of the world, from India to Britain, from Africa to Scythia, was full of abominable Idolatry: Tho' from want of writings among those people in the times of their ignorance, we can give but a stender account of their ignorance, we can give but a stender account of their ignorance, we der account of their superstition.

To begin at home with our ancient Britons: Their rites were almost wholly magical; they adored a multitude of Idols. Gildas calls them * a company of devilish monsters, exceeding the number of those in Egypt. They worshipped Thor, called the same with Justier. He was placed on a high throne, with a crown of gold on his head, encompassed with many stars, and particularly seven, representing the planets, in his left-hand, and a scepter in his right. From him Thursday is denominated. Woden or Mars, was another of their Deities; he was represented as a mighty man in persect armour, holding in one hand his fword lifted up, and his buckler in the other. From him Wednesday derives its name. Tuisco was an Idol both here and in Germany. Hence the inhabitants of the Low-countries are called Tuitch, or Duytsh-men. From him Tuesday is named. Friga or Venus was another Deity. To her they made addresses for earthly bleffings. And to her Friday was dedicated. Seater was an ill-favoured Idol, painted like an old envious rascal, with a thin face, a long beard, a wheel and a basket of flowers in his hand, and girded about with a long girdle. From him our Saturday derived its name.

^{*} De excidio Britanniæ, non longè ab initio mihi in Bibl. patrum, tom. 3. col. 580.

Chap. 2. The Idolatry of the Western Nations. 261 They also worshipped the Sun, who stood upon an high pillar, as half a man, with a face full of rays of light, and a flaming wheel on his breaft. He was adored upon Sunday. The Moon was another Idol worshipped in England, represented as a beautiful maid, having her head covered, and two ears standing out. Ermenseul was an Idol favourable to the poor, represented as a great man among heaps of flowers. Upon his head he supported a cock, upon his breast a bear, and in his right hand he held a displayed banner. Flint was another Idol, fo called, because he stood among or upon slints: And Bellatucadrus, as appears by an ancient inscription lately found in Westmoreland, Sancto Deo Bellatucadro. There was yet another Idol, named Geta, mentioned by Sedulius, a Scots Author, who flourished in the fifth century, in the reign of Theodosius the younger, and Valentinian III. * tho' I doubt if the verses some authors quote from Sedulius, as at the foot of the page +, do prove that Geta was an Idol. The priests of these heathenish Idols were called Druidæ, from the oaks under which they used to teach and facrifice. They expounded religious mysteries, taught youth, decided controversies, and ordered rewards and punishments. They committed not their mysteries to writing, but to the memory of their disciples, who spent years in learning by art their precepts in verse. They had the same kind of priests in

 \mathbf{S}

The

* Vide Præfationem ante Editionem Sedulii, Edinburgensem 1701. † Carminis paschalis exordium, pag. 2.

> Cum sua Gentiles studeant sigmenta Poeta Grandisonis pompare modis, tragicoque boatu, Ridiculove Geta, seu qualibet arte canendi, &c.

‡ Nat. Hist. lib. 16. cap. 44. pag. m. 477. Lucani Pharsalia, lib. 1. ver. 447, &c.

Gaul, as Pliny # and Lucan || inform us.

Vos quoque qui fortes animas, belloque peremptas Laudibus in longum vates dimittitis avum, Plurima fecuri fudifis carmina Bardi. Et vos Barbaricos ritus, moremque finifirum Sacrorum Druida positis repetistis ab armis. Solis nosse Deos, & cæli numina vobis, Aut solis nescire datum: nemora alta remotis Incolitis lucis.

262 The Idolatry of the Western Nations.

The Germans had the same Idols as in Britain, for from the Heathen Saxons the English learned their Idolatry. The Gauls and Germans also adored Teutates, Hefus, Taranis and Belenus, and polluted their altars with human facrifices, as has been already proved [*]. Tacitus says, They celebrated in old verse, which is the only way of freserving their history and annals among them, their God Tuisto, torn of the earth, and his son Mannus [+], the founder of their nation, to whom they affigu three fons. The same author afterwards says [‡], The Germans worship especially Mercury, whom they appeale with human facrifices on certain days, as they do Hercules and Mars, with other animals. See other instances in Cafar [||] and Tacitus , who fays, That in the island Mona, (which some translate the Isle of Man, others Angles ; tho' I conceive the account Tacitus gives of it agrees best with the latter) after the defeat, the Romans put garrifons in their towns, and cut down their groves dedicated to their cruel superstitions; for this inhuman people were accustomed to shed the blood of their prisoners on their altars, and consult their Gods over the reeking bowels of The Spaniards, as Macrobius fays ++, worshipped the image of Mars, adorned with rays, with a very great veneration, calling him Netos. Varro, as Pliny relates *, derives Lusitania, now named Portugal, from Lusus, the companion of Bacebus, who attended him in his furies and bacchanals, and left him and Pan as governours of that country, who were worshipped there. The Danes, Swedes, Muscovites, Russians, Pomeranians, and their neighbours, had almost the same Idols with the Germans. These countries were but then thinly inhabited, and the accounts we have of them are very lame and uncertain. The Russians adored an Idol called Perin, in the shape of a man, holding a burning stone in his

[*] See pag. 184-186.

^[†] De montus Germanorum, non longè ab initio. [†] Ibid. operum pag. in. 635.

^[11] Cæfir de Bello Gallico, lib. 6. cap. 20.

^{} Taciti Annal. lib-14. cap. 30.

^{† +} Saturnalia, lib. 1. cap. 19. pag. m. 357.

^{*} Nat. Hift. lib. 3. cap. 1.

Chap. 2. The Idolatry of the Western Nations. 263 his hand, refembling thunder. A fire of oak-wood was continually kept burning to the honour of this Idol. It was death to the priefts, if they suffered it to go out. Tacitus, speaking of Tiberius's wars in Germany, fays +, Templum quod Tanfana vocabant solo aquantur, the famous temple called Tanfane was razed to the foundation. Lipsius, in his notes on this place, fays, that some give the etymology of this word from Taenfank, which, in our language, signifies the beginning of things; but the old Britons called the five Taen: the upon the whole, I conceive we need not determine to whom this beathen temple was dedicated. The people of Stetin ||, in Pomerania, worshipped a three-headed Idol, and used to ask oracles of a black horse, the charge of which was committed to one of the priefts. In the countries about Muflowy they adored an Idol Zolatta Baba, the Golden Hag; a statue like an old woman, holding an infant in her bofom, and another child near her: to this Idol they offered rich fable skins. When I am to speak afterward in the fixth chapter, of the overthrow of this Idolatry, and of the establishment of Christianity among these nations, I may have fome further occasion to name fome of their Idols. Mean time, if we look northward, we may find the Scythians defiling themselves with human facrifices to their Diana Taurica, of whom Lucan speaks*. They offered their captives taken in war, to other strange Idols, which some authors call Poguisa, Fessa, Latton, Nia, Marzana, and Zievonia, Goddeffes, befide two Deities named Zelus and Poletus, worshipped jointly, like the Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux.

As to the Idolatry of the remote parts of the world in Afia, Africa, and America, I defign to discourse thereof in the seventh chapter of this estay, the knowledge of these countries being owing to the late improvements in arts and navigation, within these 200 years. I am wearied, and I fear I have wearied my reader, with these S 4 abominations ⁺ Tacitus, Annalium lib. 1. cap. 51.

[#] Vid. Saxo-Grammaticus, Crantzius in Vandalia, Olaus Magnus, &c. * Pharfalia, lib. 1. ver. 446.

Et Taranis Scythice non mitier ara Diane.

abominations of the Heathen. However, the view we have had of them, may serve to discover the lamentable condition of the Gentile world, while ferving Idols and Devils, while aliens to the commonwealth of Ifrael, strangers to the covenant of promise: without hope, and without God in the world. In which state the world continued, fo far as then inhabited, for about 2000 years, at least from before Abraham to the coming of Christ, except a little corner in the land of Canaan, where even the I/raelites, the Church of God, were too oft defiled with the idolatry and evil customs of the neighbouring heathen nations, as we have already heard. And this may make us value the infinite Mercy of our God, who has fent the day-spring from on high to visit us; to give light to them that fit in darkness, and in the shadow of death; to guide our feet in the way of peace, to bring us from the power of Satan unto God, even our blessed Redeemer, who was manifested to destroy the works of the Devil, and to bring Life and Immortality to light by the Gospel. Which leads me to

CHAP. III.

Of the Overthrow of Heathenish Idolatry, and of the Spreading of Christianity, from the beginning of the first, to the end of the third Century.

HE glorious God, who in former times, by divers methods of Divine Revelation, fioke to the Jews by his fervants the prophets, has now in these last days spoken to us by his own Son; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant. In the declining part of the Emperor Augustus's reign, this great Ambassador, our blessed Jesus, was sent from Heaven, to publish to the world the glad tidings of salvation, vation . The fall of heathenish Idolatry, by the preaching of the Gospel, and the conversion of the Gentiles. were an amazing revolution as ever happened in the world. God in infinite wisdom prepared all things for this great event, many ages before it came to pass, by admirable means, of which no man then knew the tendency and defign + (1.) He reduced the greater part of the world into two languages, which were almost universal, the Greek and Latin; that the knowledge of the Gospel might be more easily communicated, to which the difference of languages would have been a great hindrance. 'Tis true, the Apostles had the gift of tongues, and could speak all languages; but we are not to imagine that all the preachers of the Gospel had the fame privilege. (2.) The world was almost wholly united under one empire, viz. the Roman, which was another mean to facilitate the conversion of the nations: for had the earth been divided under many little principalities, subject to many sovereigns, as the West is at this day, it had been in a manner impossible, but that divers of them, if not most part, would have denied entrance to the Apostles, who were the new preachers. Little princes, who have not much to do, concern themfelves more particularly about every part of their territories, than great emperors, who having the government of the world to mind, are forced to remit the care of less important matters to their lieutenants. (3.) The dispersion of the Jews by the frequent captivities, was also a mean God made use of to prepare his way for converting the Gentiles. They gave the nations among whom they were scattered, some knowledge of the true God. (4.) Another thing which contributed very much to the defign, was the translation of the Bible into the Greek ^{} N. B. The time of Christ's birth is reckoned by the learned Spanhemius, Hist. Christianæ, in Fol. Col. 323. and by others, to be in the year of the Julian Period 4714. from the Creation of the World 3950. the first year of the 195th Olympiad, from the building of Rome 753. of Augustus's Reign, (as commencing after the Murder of Julius Casar) 44, the tenth year of the Cycle of the Sun, and the second of the Cycle of the Moon, beginning, &c. + Jurieu's Preface to the Accomplishment of Prophecies.

Greek tongue, whereby the facred oracles became common among the Heathen. About the time of our Saviour's appearance in the world, there were many profelytes of the Gate. Such were not really Jews, but they ceased to be Heathens; they renounced their Idolatry; they were present every sabbath at the reading of Moses and the prophets; they had a diffinct place in the fynagogues; of them we read in the book of the Acts, devout men who feared God. Cornelius was of that number. It could not be difficult to them to abandon Paganism; they had already left it, and they could not be hindred from becoming Christians by Judaism; for they had never embraced it: fo they became Christians without violence. A great part of the first converted Gentiles were fuch as these. (5.) By the same good Providence of God, philosophy began to flourish among the Heathen, a little before the coming of Christ, which was of great use to refine the minds of men, and render them capable of receiving celeftial and fublime truths. Finally, God possessed the Heathen with a contempt of Idolatry and Idols; they were fick of their Gods, the false oracles of their Damons ceased, their priests lost their reputation, and all the world breathed after a change.

It deserves also to be noticed, that the Roman empire being now in the highest pitch of its grandeur, all its parts united under one monarchical government, and an universal peace over the whole; the temple of Janus being shut a third time: This opened a way to a free and uninterrupted commerce with all nations; and a fpeedier passage was prepared for publishing the doctrine of the Gofpel, which the Apostles and first Preachers did carry to all the quarters of the world. As for the Jews, their minds were awakened about this time with buly expectations of the Meffras's coming; and no fooner was the birth of the Holy Jefus proclaimed by the arrival of the wife men from the East, who came to pay homage to him, but Jerusalem was filled with noise and tumult. The Sanhedrim was convened, and confulted by Herod, who, jealous of his late gotten fovereignty, was refolved to dispatch this new competitor (out of the way, way. Deluded in his hopes, he betakes himself to acts of cruelty, commanding all infants under two years old to be put to death, and among these it seems his own son, which made Augustus pleasantly say *, 'Tis better to be Herod's bog, than his son. But the Providence of God secured the holy Infant, by timely admonishing his parents to retire to Egyst, where they remained till the death of Herod, and soon after that they returned.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.

267

Near thirty years our Lord remained obscure in the retirements of a private life, applying himself, as some of the ancients tell us, to foseph's employment, the trade of a carpenter; so little patronage did he give to an idle life. But now he was called out of folitude, and owned as the Prophet God had fent to his Church. At his baptism the Holy Ghost in a visible shape descended upon him, and God by an audible voice testified of him, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Accordingly he fet himfelf to declare the counfels of God, going about all Galilee, teaching in their synage ques, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom. He particularly explained the moral law, restoring it to its just authority over the minds of men, and redeeming it from those corrupt and perverse interpretations, which the masters of the Jewish Church had put upon it. He alfo infinuated the abrogation of the Jewish economy, to which he was fent to put a period, as has been before proved †, and to enlarge the bounds of falvation, and admit both Few and Gentile to the terms of mercy. For he came as mediator between God and man, to reconcile the world to the favour of Heaven by his death and fufferings, and to propound pardon of fin and eternal life, to all who by a hearty belief in the Redeemer, attended with fincere repentance, and a holy life, were willing to entertain it. This doctrine he confirmed by miracles, which were beyond all powers and contrivances of art or nature, whereby he unantwerably demon-demonstrated, That he was a teacher come from God, and that no man could do those miracles which he did, except God were with him. He owned, That his kingdom was not of this world; and neither he, nor his immediate followers, did use any means of carnal policy to advance Christianity in the earth ||.

^{*} Macrobii Saturnalia, lib. 2. cap. 4. De jocis Augusti——Cum audiset inter pueros, quos in Syria Herodes rex Judaorum intra bimatum jussit interfici, filium quoque ejus occisium; ait, Melius est Herodis porcum esse quam filium.

† See Chap. 1. pag. 129.

Because our Lord himself was in a little time to return back to heaven, he ordained twelve, whom he called Apostles, as his immediate delegates, to whom he committed his authority and power, furnished them with. miraculous gifts, and left them to advance that excellent Religion he himself had begun. To their affistance he joined feventy disciples, as ordinary co-adjutors and companions to them. Their commission for the present was limited to Palestine, and they sent out to seek and save the lost sheep of Ifrael. How great the success of our Saviour's ministry was, may be guessed from that complaint of the Pharisees, Behold, the world is gone after him [*]. Multitudes of people from all parts did so slock after him, that they gave him not time for necessary folitude and retirement. Indeed he went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil; for God was with him [+], and multitudes followed him from Galilee, and from Judea, and from Jerusalem, and from beyond Jordan, and they about Tyre and Sidon [#]. Even in these early times, Satan did fall as lightning from heaven [1].

Our Lord having spent something more than three years in the public exercise of his ministry, kept his last passover with his Apostles; which being done, he instituted the Sacrament of the Supper, configning it to his Church as the standing memorial of his death, and the seal of the evangelic covenant, as he appointed Baptism to be the initiating seal thereof. Now the satal hour was at hand, being betrayed by one of his own Apostles, he was apprehended by the officers, and brought before

the

[#] John xviii. 36.

|| This is more fully illustrated by the Rev. Mr. Fleming in his Leganthropos, Book 3.

[*] John xii. 19.

[#] Acts x. 38.

[#] Mark iii. 8.

[||] Luke x. 18.

the public tribunals. Heavy, but false were the accufations charged upon him. The two main articles of the charge were, Blasphemy against God, and Treason a-gainst the Emperor. Tho' they were not able to make any of them good by any tolerable pretence of proof, vet they sentenced and executed him upon the cross: Pilate, who condemned him, declaring be found no fault in bim*. And the centurion glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man +. Great miracles were then done to honour our suffering Redeemer +; The veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; the graves were opened, and many bodies of saints which slept, arose and came out of their graves, after his Resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. Now when the Centurion, and those who were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God. The third day after his interment, he rose again, appeared to, and converfed with his disciples and followers; and when he had taken care of his Church, and given a fuller commission and larger instructions to his Apostles, he took his leave of them, visibly ascending up into heaven, and fat down on the right-hand of God, as Head over all things, to the Church; Angels, Principalities, and Powers being made subject to bim.

The faith of these passages concerning our Saviour's life, death and resurrection, is not only secured by the records of the evangelic historians, justified by authentic witnesses, the evidence of miracles, and the consent of all ages of the church, with other arguments of that kind; but as to the substance, it is also confirmed by the plain confession of heathens and Jews, enemies to Christianity; as we have before demonstrated, when discoursing of the truth of the Christian Religion in chapter first , to which I now rather remit the reader, than here repeat what has been formerly advanced. But I may add, that Eusebius informs us ††, "That after our Lord's Ascension, Pilate [°]accor.

" according to custom, wrote an account to the Emperor "Tiberius of our Lord's Refurrection from the dead, and of his miracles that were famous over all Palestine, and " that by many he was accounted to be God. Which "Tiberius brought before the fenate; but they rejected " it, under pretence, that no cognizance had been taken of it before it came to them: for (fays Eusebius) the " cause of God needed no human approbation nor com-" mendation." For this he cites Tertullian, a person of good knowledge in the Roman laws, who in his Apology for the Christians, (the place is still extant) writes *, "That Tiberius, in whose time the name of Christians " first entred into the world, having received informa-"tion from Palestine in Syria, concerning the truth of "the divinity that there appeared, brought the same into the senate by the privilege of his own vote. But " the fenate not having approved it, he continued of the " fame mind, and threatned death to any who accused " the Christians." Not only do Eusebius and Tertullian fay the same in this matter, but also Justin Martyr, speaking concerning the death and sufferings of our Saviour, says +, The Emperors might satisfy themselves of the truth of these things, from the Asts written under Pontius Pilate. It appears to have been customary then in the Roman Empire, not only to preserve the acts of the senate, but also for the Governours of the provinces to keep a record of what memorable things happened in their government, the acts whereof they transmitted to the Emperor. Thus did Pilate, during his procuratorship in his province. We may be persuaded Tertullian and Justin Martyr, who wrote in the time of the hot perfecutions, when Paganism reigned in the empire, would never have appealed to such records, if they had not been extant in their time. Tho' Tiberius was no religious Prince, yet, as Eusebius observes ‡, Divine Providence put this into his mind to favour the Christians at this iunsture.

 ^{*} Apolog. cap. 6. operum pag. 23.
 † Justin. Apolog. 2. pag. 96. Edit. 1686.

[#] Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.

27 I

juncture, that the doctrine of the Gospel not being slopped nor hindred in the beginning, might run through the whole world.

After our Redeemer's Ascension to Heaven, from whence the next period of the Church begins, the Apoftles began to execute the powers intrufted to them. They presently filled up the vacancy made by Judas the traitor, by the election of a new Apostle: The lot falling upon Matthias, he was numbred with the eleven. They being all endued with power from on high, as our Lord had promifed, and furnished with miraculous gifts, fet themselves to preach in places of greatest concourse, and in the face of their greatest enemies. They, who a while before fled at the approach of danger, now boldly plead the cause of their crucified master, with the immediate hazard of their lives. Great fuccess did attend their ministry. By one sermon of the Apostle Peter, were added to the Church about three thousand souls *. There was a multitude of them that believed +. By the hands of the Apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people \(\pm$. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women ||. That nothing might interrupt them in this employment, they instituted the office of Deacons , who might attend the inferior service of the Church, while the Apostles' devoted themselves to what was more immediately necessary for the good of fouls. By which prudent course innumerable converts were added to the Church.

A Perfecution arising after Stephen's Martyrdom, the Church was scattered from Jerusalem. But this proved to advantage in the issue, Christianity being thus sooner spread up and down the neighbouring countries. Notwithstanding the rage of the perfecution, the Apostles remained for a while at Jerusalem; only now and then dispatching some of their number to confirm the new converts in other places, and to propagate the faith, as the necessities of the Church required. Thus they continued near twelve years togerher, our Lord having commanded manded them not to depart from ferufalem, and the parts thereabout, till twelve years after his afcension; as the ancient tradition, mentioned by Apollonius* and Clemens Alexandrinus + tells us. Then they thought it high time to apply themselves to the full execution of the commisfion Christ had given them, to go teach and baptize all nations; and having fettled the general affairs and concerns of the Church, they betook themselves to the several provinces of the Gentile world, preaching the Gospel to every nation under heaven. Thus their sound went into all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. Innumerable multitudes of people, says Eusebius ;, in all cities and countries, like corn into a well-filled granary, being brought in by the grace of God that brings salvation. They whose minds were heretofore distempered and over-run with the error and idolatry of their ancestors, were cured by the sermons and miracles of our Lord's disciples: so as shaking off those chains of darkness and slavery the merciles Dæmons had put upon them, they freely embraced and entertained the knowledge and service of the only true God, the great Creator of the world, whom they worshipped according to the rites and rules of that divine and wifely contrived religion which our Saviour had introduced.

'Tis not easy at this time of day to write an exact history of the apostolic age. Had we the writings of Papias Bishop of Hierapolis, scholar, says Irenaus, to St. John, the commentaries of Hegesippus, Clemens Alexandrinus's institutions, Africanus's Chronology, and other writers about that time mentioned by the ancients, the relation might be more full: but alas! these are perished in the common shipwreck with other old and useful books. Dr. Cave, among the moderns, in his Antiquitates Apostolica, gives the best account I have seen of the Apostolica, gives the fuccess of their ministry, the places and countries to which they went, the churches they planted, and their acts and martyrdoms. To his affitance I own myself obliged; and from him and some others, so far as agreeing with sacred Scripture and Antiquity, ^{*} Apud Eusebium in Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 18. † Stromatum lib. 6. pag. 696. ‡ Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 3.

quity, I shall mention a few things to illustrate and fetthis affair in a clear light, still producing my vouchers. 'T is true, some of these vouchers, such as Der th u. of Tyre, and Nicephorus Califfus, lived at a great cilance from the times of the Apostles, and especially the last of them; and he has many things fabulous not to be depended upon. But on the other hand, there are no authors extant who wrote a history of the church near the aposto-lic times; the first Ecclesiastic Historian that now remains being Eusebius, who wrote in the fourth century: and it appears agreeable to the commission Christ gave his Apostl's, Mat'b. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. Luke xxiv. 47. to believe they went and preached the Gospel to some other countries befide those named in the New Testament, Neither do I see how we can account for the great increase of Christianity mentioned by unquestionable authors of the fecond and third centuries, (of which I shall fpeak before I conclude this Chapter,) unless this be allowed. To be fure the Apostles and Apostolic Men were persons of an extraordinary spirit, extraordinary gifts, who had an amasing gift of speaking many languages, and a wonderful divine providence and bleffing accompanied their labours; and therefore we are not immediately to reject every thing concerning their travels, labours, and fuccess, as fabulous; which some authors incline to, because not writ by men in the same age wherein the Apostles lived, or because the like could not be done by men in the prefent age, who have not fuch a fpirit and fuch gifts as the Apostles were endued with, provided always it be no way inconsistent with sacred Scripture.

Our Lord was faithful in appointing officers in his house, first Apostles; their name Anoologo imports their mission, and answers the Hebrew word Shiloh, sent, I Kings xiv. 6. Ahijah was sent with heavy tidings. Thus in the New Testament, 2 Cer. viii. 23. Aniologo ekknarouw is rendred in our version, the messengers of the churches. As to the apostolic office, the characters or perogatives thereof were these following. First, They were minediately called by Christ their Lord and Master.

Vol.I. T Paul

Pau is designed an Apostle, not of men, neither by mans-but by Jesus Christ, Gal. i. 1. and we have the immediate call of all the rest of them, recorded oftner than once in the New Testament ; and they were named Apostles by way of eminency. Secondly, They had infallible divine conduct in preaching and writing; the spirit was promifed to guide them into all truth, John xvi. 13. Hence, Thirdly, there was an exact harmony among them all in their doctrine; these twelve stars did all shine with the same light conveyed to them by the fun of righteousness. Fourthly, They had all feen Christ in the flesh. Thus the Apostle John speaks, That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have bandled of the word of life, I John i. I. The Apostle Peter says, We were eye-witnesses of his glory, 2 Pet. i. 16. and the Apostle Paul says, Last of all he was seen of me also, 1 Cor. xv. 8. Fifthly, Their commission was very universal, to go preach the Gospel to every creature, Mark xvi. 15. to teach and baptize all nations, Math. xxviii. 19. to preach repentance and remission of sins in Christ's name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. And therefore those authors are mistaken, who make the Apostles Bishops of any particular place, as Peter Bishop of Antioch or Rome, James Bishop of Jerusalem, John Bishop of Ephesus, &c. for the extent of places to which the Apostles went, did not change their rectoral power and jurisdiction over the whole Church; their authority reached all Churches planted and to be planted in their time: and yet as to their ordinary power, they did neither claim nor exercise superiority over other ministers, but counted them brethren, partners, fellowlabourers, and themselves fellow-elders with them. Sixthly, Another character of the apostolic dignity, was a wonderful gift of miracles; There appeared cloven tongues as of fire.—And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoft, and began to freak with other tongues, as the fririt gove them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, ^{} Matth.x. 1 — 6. Mark iii. 14 — 20. Luke vi. 13 — 17. Acts i. 26.

may

devout men, out of every nation under beaven, -and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in their own language, Acts ii. 3—6. By the hands of the Apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people, Acts v. 12. They made the blind to see, the lame to walk, cured the sick, restored the dead to life, and difpossessed devils. These were the credential letters of the holy Apostles, which did demonstrate to all men, that God was with them in an extraordinary way, that by them he might build his Church, and propagate his kingdom over the world. Seventhly, Another character of their dignity, was the divine efficacy that attended their doctrine, to turn men from durkness unto light, and from the power of Saturanto God. They were truly Boanerges, fons of thunder; their tongues were like as of fire, to kindle among people a flame of divine love to our bleffed Redeemer. By the found of these trumpets the walls of Jericho, the fortresses, sin, satan and the world had erected, did fall to the ground. Eighthly, The Apoftles had a power of making laws and rules binding to the Church, being inspired and guided by the holy Spirit for this end: They did fit on thrones judging the tribes of Israel; they declared Christians to be free from the yoke of the ceremonial law; did intimate what ought to be the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Christian Church in all ages. They fometimes came with the rod, I Cor. iv. 21. striking Elymas with blindness, Ananias and Saphira with death, calling out Hymenæus, Alexander, and the incestuous person out of the Church, and appointing a heretic, after the first and second admonition, to be rejected. At other times they came with love, and in the spirit of meekness, befeeching, as ambassadors for Christ, that we may be reconciled to God. Ninthly, Another character of the apostolic dignity, is, to write to Christian Churches Epistles, which were to be a part of the Canon of the Scripture, and a flanding rule to the Church in all ages. Paul prefaceth almost all his Epistles with his apostolic power: so do Peter, James, Jude and John, or with words of the same import. The reader who defires a larger treatife of these characters, may confult a differtation of the learned Spanhemius

Filius, as marked at the foot of the page.*

Tho' it was the principal duty of the Apostles to preach the Gospel to all nations, to establish Christianity, and to govern the Church, yet they did not exercise this office in its full extent, till after our Lord's Resurrection; then they executed their commission, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. The Jewish Oeconomy was like the light at the window, which enlightens one house; but the Christian Oeconomy was as the light of the fun, to enlighten the world. The Apostles, in pursuance of their commission, in less than forty years after Christ's Ascension, went almost thro' the whole then known world, according to our Lord's prediction; The Gospel of this kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, Matth. xxiv. 14. that is, the end of the Jewish state. Mahomet's way was cut out by the fword, and his religion was calculated to fatisfy men's brutish lusts. But the design of Christianity is to teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that bleffed hope, and the glorious affearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jefus Christ.

To understand the Propagation of the Gospel, and the Overthrow of Paganism, in the first age of the Christian Church, I conceive it will be necessary to give a view of the lives of the Apostles, who carried the name of Christ far and near, and made Dagon fall before the ark. I shall then endeavour to give a short account of them.

I begin with Peter, whom the catalogues in the Gospel name first of all the Apostles. He was born at Bethsaida in Galilee; the particular year of his birth cannot now be recovered, but some conceive it probable, that he was ten years of age, when our Saviour was born of the bleffed Virgin. Being circumcifed, he was called Simon. This name was not abolished by Christ, but additioned by the name of Cephas, which in Syriae, the vulgar language then of the Fews, fignifies a stone or rock; thence 'tis derived into the Greek Hittpos, by us named Peter. The Popes usually change their names upon their advancement, which custom began A.D. 844. when Peter de Bocca Porco, i. e. Swine's mouth, on his election called himfelf Sergius II. yet none of them called themselves Peter. This Apostle's father was Jonab, probably a fisher-man of Bethfaida, which fignifies a bouse of fishing, or ensuaring. His brother was the Apostle Andrew, who is frequently by the ancients called πρωτοκλήτος, being the first of the Apostles who was converted and called to Christ, and was an instrument in Peter's conversion, Job. i. 40, 41. It is evident from the AETs of the Apostles*, that God honoured Peter to be an happy instrument to convert multitudes both of Fews and Gentiles. And indeed there is little certain concerning him, but what we have in the facred Scripture.

^{*} l'issertatio de Apostolis duodecim institutis, & de Apostolatu stricte dicto. Spanhemii FF. operum Tom. 2. Col. 289, _____312.

The Papists build a great deal upon Peter's being named first in the lists of the Apostles, and especially that Matthew expresses it with a kind of emphasis $\pi_0 \hat{\omega}_{T0}$, Σ_{t-1} μων, first Simon, Matth. x. 2. But this foundation will not bear the superstructure they rear upon it. The true reason of Peter's being always named first, seems to be +, that he was marked out by Christ, as the man that was to be first sent out and employed to begin the Gospel-Church. He did not only work the first miracle after Christ's ascension, Adsiii. 6. but also preach the first fermon, and that with fuch fuccefs, as to convert 3000 to the Church, Ali ii. 14-42. whereas before, the whole number of Christians, men and women, amounted only to about 120, Alls i. 15. of which the Apostles, with the LXX Difciples, made the greater part. And this same Apostle had the first commission to begin the Gentile Church, by preaching to Cornelius and his family, Ast. chap.x. No wonder then if all the evangelical writers agree to place his name in the front of the lift of the Apollles.

 T_3

Ιt

^{*} Chapters ii, iii, iv, v, ix, x, xi
† Mr. Fleming's Loganthropos, Vol. 2. pag. 169.

It has been afferted by a multitude of popish writers, that this Apostle Peter was bishop at Antioch seven years, and at Rome 25 years. They tell us a great many things of his actings at Rome; of his debate with Simon Magus, and victory over him. Of his appointing his fucceffor, but whether Linus or Clement, is not agreed; and of his martyrdom in the 13th year of the reign of Nero. But all these things seem to be false and without foundation; as appears, first, from the filence of Luke, the inspired writer of the Atts of the Apostles, who records many things concerning Peter, from the first to the fixteenth chapter of that book. He writes of his journey to Lydda, Joppa, Cafarea, Jerusalem, and Antioch, but not one word of his going to Rome to found the Papal Chair. He speaks of the great things this Apostle had been honoured to do, as before observed, not only before Faul's conversion, but after it, even to the Synod at Ferusalem. He relates Paul's journey to Rome, and his meeting with the Christians there; but not one word of his meeting with Peter, the supposed bishop of that place. Secondly, Is it to be conceived, that when the Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, chap. xvi. falutes the Christians and his Fellow-labourers there by their names, that he should not speak one word of this Apostle, if he had been there? If it be faid, that he had fled from the city because of Claudius's persecution; this is alledged without any ground. Why should they make their first bishopa non-resident till the second year of Nero, or fiftyeighth after Christ's birth, when, according to Baronius, this Epiftle to the Roma s was writ? Besides, why does Paul, when commending the faith of the Romans, speak nothing of the founder of their Church? Add to all this, That Paul in all his Epiflles written from Rome, tho' he speaks of Aristarchus, Marcus, Luke, Demas, and others, yet not one word of Peter there *. Thirdly, Peter himfelf speaks not one word of what the papifts alledge. If he had founded the Roman Church, why does he no where make mention of it? Why does he, when writing to the dispersed Jews, no where affert his prerogative?

tive? Why, when exhorting the clders, I Pet. v. I. does he fay only, I who am also an elder, συμπρεσβύτεcos? If he was absent from Rome so long as our adverfaries own, why does he never write to his flock, to Atrengthen and encrease their faith? Fourthly, The story which the Papills alledge, is inconfiftent with the facred chronology, or account of these times: For, from the time of Christ's death, in the 18th year of Tiberius, to the 13th year of Nero, when Peter was crucified, are only 36 years, viz. 5 in Tiberius's reign, 4 in Caligula's, 14 in Claudius's, and 13 in Nero's. Now Peter did not stir a foot out of Judæa, till 12 years after our Lord's death; then he was cast into prison by Herod, Ast. ch. xii. which was the fourth year of the Emperor Claudius, and the last of King Agrippa. Six years after that, or the eighteenth after Christ's Crucifixion, we find him prefent at a Synod at Jerusalem, Act. chap. xv. and after this, according to our adversaries, he was seven years at Antioch, fo as there remain only eleven years in which he could possibly be at Rome. And indeed there is no solid evidence he was there at all. For, Ffibly, Peter being the Apostie of the Circumcision, Galat. ii. 7, 8. we have more reason to believe, that when Paul was carried to Rome, he visited the Jews dispersed in Greece, Thracia, the Lesser Asia, Babylon, and the East, and gained a great harvest among them, even to the day of his death.

Against these arguments there can be no just objection. For the this Apostle, i Pet.v. 13. says, The Church that is at Babylon faluteth you; yet this Babylon is not Rome. True it is, that John in the book of the Revelation, writing prophetically of the corrupt and idolatrous state of the Church of Rome, compares her to Babylon; but here Peter writes plainly and historically of Babylon in the East, once the Head of the Assyrian Empire, where there was so great a concourse of Jews, as that afterward in that place they framed the Babylonish Thalmud. The many of the ancients have given some ground for this story, yet it slows originally only from Papias, called T 4

Bishop of Hierarolis, as cited by Eusebius*, for Papias's books are loft. But if they were extant, according to the same Eusebius +, the author of them was but a perfon of a mean character, a rude, simple, and vain man, who believed and reported things upon common tradition, even things that were μυθικωτέρα, liker to fables than truths. He was a Millenary, and introduced fabulous stories into the Church, which a multitude of writers after him have licked up. Those who desire to see this question more fully examined, and the opinion I have advanced confirmed, may confult the Authors cited at the foot of the page #. After all, tho' it should be granted that Peter had been at Rome, or had died or suffered martyrdom there, this is no reason for afferting his Primacy or Episcopacy in that city, more than at Joppa, Antioch or

Babylon. But leaving Peter, I proceed to

Paul the Apostle. He was born at Tarsus, the metropolis of Cilicia, a city rich and populous, privileged with the immunities of Rome, Acts xxii. 25—28. He was of Jewish parents, of the tribe of Benjamin, trained up in his younger years in liberal arts, and also in the occupation of a tent-maker. The Jews fay, He who learns not his fan a trade, learns him to be a thief. When he came to riper years, he was fent to be educated at Jewalm, under the care of Gamaliel, of the Sect of the Pharifees, and became a zealous perfecutor of the Christians. But by the rich and free Grace of God, he was wonderfully converted, which some conceive was in the fecond year after our Lord's Passion. But the learned Spanbenius inclines to fix it in the eighth year from Christ's death, the third of the reign of the Emperor Claudius ||. Then was he called to bear Chr fish name to the Gentiles, and Kings, and Children of Israel, Asis ix. 15. and was eminently fuccessful in that work. Being remarkably preferved from the evil defigns the Fews had against his life, Als ix. 23-25. he preaches

* Hist. Eccl.lib. 2. cap. 15. + Hist. Eccl.lib. 3. cap. 39. + Spanhemii FF. operum Tom. 2. Col. 331—388. Turretin. Theo. Elen. Vol. 3. pag. 188, & feqq. and others.

at Spanhemii operum Tom. 2. Col. 312. de Conversionis Paulinæ epocha.

Chap. 3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.

28 r

at Antioch a whole year. Here the disciples were, as by divine appointment, called Christians, for the word xpnματίσαι, in Acts xi. 26. imports fo much, and χρημα-TIGUOS, Rom. xi. 4. is the Answer of God. After this, he preached at Salamis in the isle of Cyprus, and in several parts of the Leffer Asia, as at Perga and Antioch in Pisidia, Asts ch. xiii. where, because the Jews rejected the offers of Grace, according to the tenor of his commission, he turned to the Gentiles. Thereafter he preached at Derbe and Lystra, cities of Lycaonia, Acts ch. xiv. and in all these places he had many converts. After the Synod at Ferusalem, we find him preaching at Thessalonica, and at Athens, where he found an altar to an unknown God, Asts xvii. 23. Dr. Cave, from Œcumenius and Jerom, has the inscription thereof thus*: Θέοις Ασίας και Ευρώπης και Λίβυης, θεω αγνώστω και ξένω, that is, To the Gods of Asia, Europe and Africa, to the unknown and strange God.

By Paul's preaching at Corinth many believed and were baptized, Acts xviii. 8. Thence he failed to Epbesus, a place famous for idolatry and magick; hence Εφεσία γράμματα for mystical spells, by which they used to heal diseases, and drive away evil spirits, of which Ciemans of Alexandria and Josephus + do speak. Here the Gospel had such success, as many believed, confessed their fins, and were ashamed of their evil deeds. Many also who used curious arts, brought their books together, and burned them before all men; and they counted the frice of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver: Acts xix. 18, 19. which is reckoned in our money 1500 lib. Sterl. These converts thus declared, they abhorred their former magical rites, whereby they had ferved the devil. and woll for ever abandon them. This was a trophy of the victory of the kingdom of Christ over heathenish idolatry.

Our Apostle after this resolved to go up to Jerusalem, and carry some charitable collections for poor Christians there. Some Jews, who had come from Asia, finding ^{*} Lives of the Apostles, pag. 59.

† Stromatum lib. 1. Antiq. lib. 8.

him in the temple raifed a tumult, laid hold on him, and called the rest of the Jews to their affistance, telling them, This was the fellow who every where vented do-Etrines destructive to the institutions of the law and purity of that place, which he prefaned, by bringing in uncircumcifed Greeks into it. And they had gone near to have dispatched him, if the chief captain Claudius Lysias, who commanded the Roman garrison in the tower of Antonia, had not delivered him from their hands, fupposing him to be more than an ordinary person. Paul in his own defence made an excellent speech, Ats xxii. declaring his education in the rites of the Jewish religion, and his zeal for it; and there gives a punctual relation of the manner of his conversion, and that he had received the command of God to depart from Jerusalem, and preach to the Gentiles. When his enemies heard this, they could hold no longer; they cried, Away with this follow from the earth, 'tis not fit he should live. To avoid their fury, the captain of the guard commanded him to be brought to the caftle, and examined by whipping: But the Apostle did plead his privilege as a Roman citizen, that he could not be bound and fourged. Of this privilege Cicero speaks plainly (his words I subjoin at the foot of the page *) as tending to fet in a clear light this or the like passage. Upon this score his adversaries gave over the defign of whipping him; the commander himself being a little startled, that he had bound and chained a denizen of Rome. Next day the governour commanded his chains to be knock'd off, and brought Paul before the Sambedrim, where he justified himself, faying, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day, Acts xxiii. 2, &c. Religion and a good confcience begets heaven in a man's bosom. Five days after this comes down Ananias the high-priest, with some of the Sanbedrim, to Casarea, accompanied with Tertullus their advocate, who in a neat, but short speech, accused Paul of sedition, heresy, and profaning the temple, Acts xxiv. 2—6. As to the charge of fedition, the Apostle flatly denied it; as to herefy, he confessed, after the manner they call herefy, so worship I the God of my sathers. As to profaning the temple, that his defign in coming to Jerusalem was to bring charitable contributions to his distressed brethren; that he was in the temple neither with multitude nor tumult. Felix continued Paul a prisoner two years, and being himself displaced by the Emperor Nero, to gratify the Jews he left him still in prison. Porcius Festus having succeeded governour of the province, the Jews renew their accusation against Paul before him, Atts xxv. but were not able to bring any proof: however Festus, to oblige the Jews, when entring on his government, asked, if he would go and be tried at Jerusalem? The Apostle, understanding the consequence of that proposal, pleaded, That being a Roman citizen, he ought to be judged by their laws, and made formally his appeal to Cafar, which Festus received. Agrippa, who succeeded Hered as Tetrarch of Galilee, being come with his fister Bernice to visit this new governour, and defiring to hear and see Paul, at Festus's command he was brought forth. Being permitted to speak, he made an excellent apology for himself and the Christian Religion, Alts xxvi. which almost persuaded Agrippa to be a Christian. It being finally refolved Paul should be sent to Rome, he, with some other prisoners of note, were committed to the charge of Julius, commander of a company belonging to the legion of Augustus. In September A.D. 56, or as others 57, they proceeded in their voyage; the particulars whereof being described by the inspired historian, Alls xxviii, xxviii, I here omit them. Publius the governour of the island Melite, now called Malta, courteously entertained Paul three days; his father was then fick of a fever and flux, Paul laid his hands upon him, and healed him and many of the inhabitants, which made them heap honours upon him: yea, Publius himself is said by some authors to have been converted to the Christian Faith, and made bishop of the island *. The Apostle being come to Rome, he lived two years in his own hired house, where he preached without interruption to all who came to him, and with good fuccess. We find in the last chapter of the Epistle to the Romans the names of several Christian converts, and in Philip, iv. 22. the Apostle says, All the faints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cefar's houshold. And therefore we may observe, that antiquity speaks of fome converts of better quality, even belonging to the court it felf, among which the Roman martyrology reckons Torpes, an officer of prime note in Nero's paface +, and afterward a martyr for the faith; and one of that prince's concubines, supposed to be Poj pæa Sabina, to whom Tacitus gives this character |, That she wanted nothing to render her to be one of the most accomplished ludies in the world, but a chaste and virtuous mind. Iknow not how far it may countenance her conversion, at least her inclination to a better religion than Heathenism, that Josephus ; calls her a pious woman, and that she effectually follicited the cause of the Jews with her husband; and in his own life he speaks of further favours he received from her at Rome ++. I find also Tacitus mentions a noble woman called Pemeonia Gracina, superstitionis externæ rea, that is, guilty of foreign superstition ; by which we may guess, that he means she was a Christian. But we have a more fure account in the inspired writings of this Apostle, of his converting Onesimus that had cheated his mafter Philemon, and run away from him; but upon his conversion he became faithful to his master, and is kindly recommended to him by Paul || ||.

^{*} Cicero in Verrem, lib. 5. Orat. 10. operum pag. m. 378. Cedebatur virgis in medio foro Messane civis Romanus, judices; cum interea nullus gemitus issius miseri,---nisi bac, civis Romanus sum.---- Onomen dulce libertatis! O jus eximium nostra civitatis! O lex Porcia, legesque Sempronia. Ibid. pag. 379. Facinus est, vinciri civem Romanum: scelus, verberari: propè parricidium, necari: quid dicam in crucem tollere? verbo satis digno tam nesaria res appellari nullo modo potest.

After two years custody at Rome, the Apostle being restored to liberty, and minding his commission to the Gentiles, he prepared himself for a greater circuit; tho what way he directed his course, is not absolutely certain.

 $^{
m r}$ Tis

^{*} Spondani epitome annalium Baronii ad annum Christi 58. pag. m.96. + Ad diem Maii 17. pag. 308.

[|] Annalium, lib. 13. cap. 45. pag. m. 298. # Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 7. # In vita fua, non longe ab initio.

^{} Annalium lib. 13. pag. m. 290. || Epistle to Philemon.

Tis probable he preached both in the eastern and western parts of the world; for Clemens, Paul's contemporary, in his excellent epistle to the Corinthians, tells us *, That Paul being seven times cast into chains, having suffered whipping and stoning, gained the reward of his patience. He preached the Gospel both in the east and west; he taught risheousness to the whole world, and went to the utmost bounds of the west, (end to tessua the doorse, by which some understand Britain) and having infered martyrdom und r the emperors, he departed out of this world into a happy place, leaving the greatest example of patience. He intended once and again to go to Siai, Rom. xv. 24, 28, and probably did go thither. Theodoret informs us, That he brought the Gospel to the ists of the sea †, by which he seems to intend Britain. He returned to Rome about the eighth or winth year of Nero's reign, where he was cast into prison, and suffered martyrdom.

Andrew the Apostle was born at Bethsaida, a city of Galilee, standing on the banks of the lake Genefarith; he was fon to John or Jonas, a fisherman there, and brother to Simon Peter, but whether elder or younger, is not certain; probably younger. He feems to have been a disciple of John the Baptist, upon whose testimony concerning our Lord, Behold the lamb of God, &c. Andrew, and another disciple, who seems to have been John the Apostle, follow our Saviour to the place of his abode, John i. 37—40. Upon this account by the ancients he is frequently called πρωτοκλήτος, that is, the first called. After some converse, he acquaints his brother Simon, and they both come to Christ. About a year after this our Lord passing through Galilee, found them fishing on the sea of Tiberias, and calls them to be fishers of men, Matth. iv. 19. Mark i. 16, 17. that is, to convert men by the efficacy of the doctrine he was to preach to the world, commanding them to follow him; and accordingly they left all, and followed Lim. Little more is recorded of him in the facred History. After our Lord's afcention to heaven, when the Holy Ghoft had been plentifully poured out upon the Apollies, wo qualify them to subdue the world to Christ, by the preaching preaching of the Gospel, and to root out profaneness and idolatry; 'tis affirmed by the ancients, that the' Apostles agreed among themselves, or by lot, as some authors fay*, what part of the world each should take. In this partition, Andrew had Scythia and its neighbouring countries for his share. He passed along the Euxine Sea, called once Axenus +, for the inhospitable humour of the people, who used to facrifice strangers, and to drink out of their skulls. Having travelled over many of the Scythian regions, and converted many to the Christian Faith, he returned to Byzantium, since called Constantinople, where he instructed the people in the knowledge of the Christian Religion, founded a church for divine worship, and ordained Stachys, whom Paul calls his beloved Stachys, first bishop of that place ||. Here he is faid to have preached the Gospel two years with good fuccess, converting many to the Christian Faith. Afterward he travelled over Thrace, Macedonia, Theffaly, Achaia; Nazianzen adds Epirus ‡. In all which places, for many years, he preached and propagated Christianity, confirming the doctrine he taught with figns and miracles, and gave his last testimony to the truth, by fuffering martyrdom at Patræ in Achaia, being there crucified by order of Agens king of the Edessens, fays Directions bishop of Tyre . Ni erborus tells us ++, That the crime objected against him was, That he had perfunded Maximilla the king's wife, and Stratocles his brother, to embrace the Christian Faith, and abbor impicis. Bernard fays, That St. Andrew was led to his execution with a composed mind; when he came within sight of the cross. his body did not tremble, his face grew not fale; but faid he bad long defired that happy bour, the cross had been confecrate t by the body of Chrit, a d he came joysill; to it, as a disciple and follower of but, weating to be brought sife to his master. The church of Rome celebrate his memory no the 30th of November || ||: But in what year he fuffered, is not recorded. 7 imes

^{*} Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 2 cip. 1.

† Strabo Geog. lib. 7. pag 20%.

† Niceph. Cili tas, Hist. Accl. lib. 2. cip. 39.

† Orat. 25. pag 43%.

 In Synopsi.

† Thit. Eccl. lib. 2. cip. 39.

† Passio St. Andrew apud Surrum ad u.cm. Novembris 30. pag. 653.

Tames furnamed the great, either for his age, being elder than the other James, or for some peculiar honours conferred upon him by our Lord; was by birth a Galilean, partner with Peter in the trade of fishing, from which our Lord called him to be one of his disciples, Mark i. 19, 20. He chearfully complied with the call, leaving all to follow him. Soon after this he was called from the station of an ordinary disciple to the apostolic office, and honoured with some peculiar acts of favour. beyond most of the rest of his equals. He with Peter, and John his brother, were taken to fee the miraculous raising of Jairus's daughter; were admitted to Christ's glorious transfiguration on the mount; and taken along with him to the garden, to be witnesses to those bitter fufferings he there endured for us, the better to encourage them under, and prepare them for their own trials. We have no certain account what became of him immediately after our Saviour's afcension. Jerom tells us *, that be preached to the dispersed Jews, by which he probably means the Fewish converts, dispersed after the death of Stephen. And we may conclude, that fince the Apostles, after our Lord's afcending up on high, staid feveral years together at Jerujalem, or in the bounds of Judea; and since James lived so short a while, it is utterly improbable that he went either to Spain, Portugal, Britain, or Ireland, to plant Christianity; however some Spanish and other monastic writers affirm it. As to his sufferings, Herod Agripfa, fon of Aristobulus, grandchild to Herod the Great, being made king over Judæa, through the favour of Claudius Cæsar, to make himself popular with the Jews, sailed a perfecution against the Christians, and killed this Apostle James, the brother of John, with the fword, Asts xii. 2. Eufebius, from Climens of Alexandria tells us +, " That as he was led to the place of martyr-" dom, the officer that guarded him, or his accuser, fays " Suidas ||, being convinced of the evil he had done, con-" fessed himself to be a Christian, and begged this Apo-" ftle would pardon him; who after a little pause, kissed

^{*} De scriptoribus, in Jacobo. + Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap 9.

"him, faying, Prace be to thee; and both were beheaded." Divine vengeance fuffered not his death to be long unrevenged: For the inspired writer assures us, Acts xii. 21-23. "That upon a fet day, Hered ar-" rayed in royal apparel, fat upon his throne, and made " an oration, and the people gave a shout, saying, it is "the voice of a God, and not of a man; and immediately " the Angel of the Lord fmote him, because he gave not "God the glory; and he was eaten of worms, and gave " up the ghost." Josephus the Jewish historian, who might himself remember it, being then a youth of seven or eight years of age, fets down the story with these circumstances ‡. "Herod removed to Cæsarea, having en-" ded the third year of his government over all Judæa. "While there, he proclaimed folemn fights and festival "entertainments in honour of Cæsar, to which flocked many nobility and a croud of people; on the second "day he came with great state to the theatre, to make " an oration to the people, clothed in a robe curioufly " wrought over with filver, which encountring with the " beams of the rifing finn, reflected fuch a luftre, as be-" gat fome veneration in the multitude, who cried out, as prompted by flatterers, that it was fome Deity they " beheld; which impious applause Herod received with-" out any diflike: but a fudden accident changed the " fcene; looking up, he faw an owl fitting on a rope over " his head, which he prefently own'd as a fatal meffen-" ger of his death, as before it had been of his fuccefs. "A melancholy feized his mind, and exquisite torments " on his bowels; Behold, fays he, the Deity you admired, " I'm commanded to die; a fatal necessity convinceth you of flattery and falshood; he whom you faluted as immortal, " is burried to death! Being removed to his palace, his " pains increased on him, tho' the people prayed for his " life and health, yet his acute torments prevailed, and " after five days put a period to his life." To return, tho' the Apostle James was beheaded, yet the Word of God grew and multiplied, Acts xii. 24. Fohn

John the Apostle was a Gallean, the son of Zebedee and Salome, the younger brother of James. Before his coming to Christ, he seems to have been for some time the disciple of John the Baptist, being probably that other disciple who was with Andrew, when they left the Baptist to follow our Saviour. So particularly does he relate all the circumstances of that transaction, tho' modestly, as in other parts of the Gospel, concealing his own name. He was at the fame time with his brother called to be a Disciple and an Apostle, Mark i. 19, 20. He was by far the youngest of all the Apostles, as the ancients affirm, and his great age feems to prove it; for he lived near 70 years after our Saviour's death. Many passages concerning him in the facred Scriptures are recorded, in conjunction with his brother James. He was the Disciple whom Jesus loved, that is, treated with more freedom and familiarity than the rest, being acquainted with the most private passages of his life; and he had some instances of particular kindness conferred upon him, lying in our Saviour's bosom, or leaning toward his breast at the Paschal Supper. He was also very constant in his affection to our Lord, staying with him when the rest deferted him. Indeed upon our Lord's first apprehension he fled, as the other Apostles. But 'tis not improbable. that foon after his mafter was feized, he was the young man who followed him, baving a limen eleth cuft chout his naked body; and the young men [the officers] laid hold on him, and he left the linnen cloth and fled from them naked, Mark xiv. 51, 52. Tho' he fled at present to a zoid the sudden violence offered him, yet he soon recovered himself, and returned back to seek his master, considently entring the high-priest's hall, and waited upon him, and for any thing we know, was the only Apostle that did fo. At the crucifixion he owned him in the midst of arms, guards, and thickeft crouds of inveterate enemies. Our Redeemer, by his last testament on the Cross, appointed him guardian of his own mother the bleffed Virgin, John xix. 26,27. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the d sciple standing by, whom he loved, he said to his mother, Woman, behold thy son! and to the Vol. I.

distiple, Behold thy mother! and from that hour that distiple took ber to his own home. Her husband Joseph being some true before this dead, this Apostle made her a principal part of his charge and care. At the first news of our Lord's Refurrection, he with Peter did hafte to the sepulchre. These two seem to have been very intimate. After Christ's Ascension, we find them going up to the temple at the hour of prayer, Acts iii. and miraculously healing the impotent cripple. They both preached to the people, and were both apprehended together by the Priefts and Sadducees, and thrown into prison, Acts iv. and next day brought forth to plead their cause before the Sanhedrim. These two were chosen to go to Samaria to confirm. the plantations Philip had made in these parts, Asts viii. 13, 14. where they confounded and baffled Simon Magus, and exhorted him to repentance. To them also Paul addreffed himself, as those who seem'd to be pillars; who when they perceived the grace that was given to him, they gave him and Barnabas the right-hand of fellowship, that they should go unto the heathen, Gal. ii. 9. They confirmed their mission to the Gentiles.

In the division of the provinces the Apostles made among themselves, the lesser Asia fell to John's share, tho' he did not presently enter upon this charge, for probably he dwelt still at his own house at Jerusalem, till the death of the bleffed Virgin, which is reckoned by Eusebius to have happened in the 48th year from Christ's birth*. After this he applied himself to the Propagation of Christianity in Afia, preaching it where it had not taken place, and confirming it where it was already planted. His chief residence is said to have been at Ephefus. Nor can we suppose that he confined his ministry to Asia Minor, but that he preached also in other parts of the East, probably in Parthia; his first Epiftle being anciently entitled to them. And the Jesuits in the relation of their fuccess in these parts, tell us +, That the Bafforæ, a peofle in India, constantly affirm from a tradition of their ancestors, That St. John planted the Christian

^{*} In Chronico ad Annum Christi 48.

[‡] Literæ Jesuitarum, anno 1555...

Christian Faith there. Having spent several years in this work, he was accufed to Domitian the Emperor, author of the fecond perfecution against the Christians, as an afferter of implety, and a subverter of the religion of the empire. By his command the Pro-consul of Asia fent him prisoner to Rome, where Tertullian says*, He was cast into a cauldron of boiling oil; but God who preserved the three children in the fiery furnace, preserved him, and brought him safe out of it, and he was presently ordered to be transported to the disconsolate Island Patmos in the Archipelago; where he wrote his Apocalypse, or book of Revelations, and there remained several years; instructing the inhabitants in the Faith of Christ. God conversed with him by heavenly visions, when he was cut off from ordinary conversation with men. When D_{θ} mitian was carried off by death, Cocceius Nerva succeeded in the empire, who being of a more fober temper, recalled those whom the fury of his predecessor had sent into banishment. John returned into Asia the lesser, and refided at Ephefus. There he wrote his Gospel, and lived to the time of the Emperor Trajan. About the beginning of his reign he departed this life very aged, about the 98th or 99th year of his life, tho' Dorotheus + makes him much older.

Philip was born at Bethfaida, near the sea of Tiberias, the city of Andrew and Peter. Of his parents and trade the Gospel takes no notice, tho' probably he was a fisherman, the general trade of that place. He was among the first who was called to be a Disciple and an Apostle, Joh. i. 43—47. We have but a sew passages relating to him in the history of the Gospel‡. In the distribution of the several provinces made by the Apostles, tho' no mention be made by Eusebius what share sell to Philip, yet we are told by others ||, that the Upper-Asia was his province, and that he preached and planted Christianity in Scythia, where he applied himself with great diligence and industry, to recover men out of the snare of the devil, by the embracing of the truth. By the constancy of his preaching, and efficacy of his doctrine, he gained many converts, whom he baptized into the profession of the Christian Faith, at once curing both their fouls and their bodies; their fouls of error and idolatry, and their bodies of infirmities and differences; healing difeafes, disposiessing Damons, settling Churches, and appointing them guides and ministers to oversee them. Having for many years fuccessfully managed the apostolic office, in the last period of his life he came to Hisrapoles in Phrygia, a city rich and populous, but mad upon idolatry. Among the rest of their vain deities, Nice borus reports *, "That they worshipped a serpent or dragon, kept it in " a temple, and offered facrifices to it. When Philip, " with his fifter Marianne, a virgin who accompanied 44 him, came there, by prayer to God he obtained that " this famed ferpent evanished, and its worshippers were " ashamed; and by his exhortations, accompanied with "divine power, he prevailed with many to renounce idolatry, and embrace the Christian Religion. Satan, " enraged at this overthrow, uses his old methods of " perfecution; the magistrates of the city seize the " Apostle, and hanged him by the neck against a " pillar."

^{*} De præscrip. hæret. cap. 36. pag. m. 240. Percurre Ecclesias Apostolicas—Habes Romam ubi Apostolus Joannes, postquamin oleum igneum demersus, nihil passus est, in insulam relegatur, + In Synopsi.

[‡] See Joh. vi. 5. xii. 22. iv. 8.

^{||} Simeon Metaphrastes apud Surium ad 1, diem Maii. Cave's Antig. Apostolica.

That Bartholomew was one of the Apostles, is evident from the sacred history of the New-Testament, where his name is frequently recorded among the rest; tho' there is little notice taken of him under that name. Hence some suppose he is the same with Nathanael. What renders this more specious, is, that as John never mentions Bartholomew in the number of the Apostles, so the other Evangeliits never take notice of Nathanael, and we find Nathanael reckoned with the other Apostles, to whom our Lord appeared at the sea of Tiberias, Joh. xxi. 1, 2. If it be so, he was by birth of Cana in Galilee. We have an account of his conversion, when our Lord calls him an Israelite indeed, a man in whom is no guile, Joh.i. 47—49. He being convinced of our Lord's Divinity

^{*} Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 39. † Matth, x, 3. Markin, 18. Luke vi. 14. Acts i. 13.

That when Pantænus, an eminent phil sopher, and good Christian, themaster of Clemens of Alexandria, the formaster of Clemens of Alexandria, the came as far as India, the sing of Which Euselius gives this account #, That when Pantænus, an eminent phil sopher, and good Christian, themaster of Clemens of Alexandria, from holy zeal to propagate Christianity, went to the East, he came as far as India, the Went in Hebrew Letters, left there by Bartholomew, one of the Apostles, who had preached to these countries. After this Apostle's labours in the East, he returned to the more western and northern parts of Asia. turned to the more western and northern parts of Asia. He was with Philip at Hierapolis in Phrygia, instructing that people in the principles of Christianity, and convincing them of the folly of their idolatry. "The ma-"gistrates enraged, designed him to martyrdom; but when they heard, that divine justice would revenge "his death, and did feel fome fymptoms thereof, by the beginnings of an earthquake, they embraced the Christian Faith, fays Nicephorus ||, and loosed the Apostle from his chains." After this he went to Lycaonia, where he instructed the people in the Christian Religion. His last removal was to Albanople in Armenia the Great, a place overgrown with idolatry; from which when he fought to recover the people, he was by the governour of the place commanded to be crucified , which he chearfully underwent, comforting and confirming the converted Gentiles to the last minute of his life. Heretics have perfecuted his memory after his death, no less than heathens did his person when alive, fathering a schu-

^{*} Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 19. † De Scriptoribus in Bartholomæo. † Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 10. | Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 39.  Hieronymus de Scriptoribus. Do1otheus in Synopsi de 12 A-postolis.

lous Gospel upon his name, altogether unworthy of him; which, with others of that stamp, is justly condemned as apocryphal.

Matthew called also Levi, tho' a Roman officer, yet was an Hebrew of the Hebrews, both his names speaking him purely of Jewish extract. He feems to have been a Galilean, the fon of Alpheus and Mary, fifter or kinfwoman to the bleffed Virgin. His trade was a publican or tax gatherer to the Romans, an office of bad report among the Jews, being not only a grievance to their purses, but also an affront to the liberty of their nation. Our Lord having cured a famous Paralytic, retired out of Capernaum to walk by the fea-fide, where he taught the people who flocked after him. Here he faw Mat-thew fitting in his custom office, whom he called to come and follow him *. The man was rich, had a gainful trade, and was a prudent person: he understood he must exchange wealth for poverty, gainful masters for a despised Saviour; yet he left all his interests and relations to become our Lord's Disciple. He entertained him at a dinner in his house, to which he invited several Publicans of his own profession, hoping they might be converted by our Lord's converse and company. After his election to the Apostolate, he continued with the rest till our Saviour's Ascension, and then for the first eight years at least preached up and down Judæa. About this time he wrote his History of the Gospel, tho' some of the ancients fay, he wrote the fame in Hebrew. I fee no solid evidence for this, it flows originally from the testimony of Papias, cited by Eusebius †. Now Papias's writings are all loft, and tho' extant, Eusebius in the same place, owns he was one who reported things as told him by tradition, and wrote τινα μυθικώτερα, things liker to fables than truths. And there is no reason to question but the Greek copy of this Gospel in the facred Canon is authentic. Little certainty can now be had, what travels this Apostle underwent for advancing the Christian Faith. Æthiopia is generally affigned as the province where where he laboured *. Metaphrastes says, That he went first into Parthia; and having successfully planted Christianity in these parts, he thence travelled into Æthiopia †; that is the Asiatic lying near India. By preaching and miracles he mightily triumphed over error and idolatry, convinced and converted multitudes, ordained spiritual guides and pastors to confirm and build them up, and bring over others to the saith, and then snisshed his course. 'Tis probable, as an ancient writer at the foot of the Page ‡ affirms, that he suffered martyrdom at Naddabar, a city in Æthiopia, but by what kind of death is uncertain. Dorotheus | says, He died, and was knownably buried at Hierapolis in Parthia.

^{*} Matth.ix 9. Mark ii. 14—27. Lukev.27—31. † Hist. Ecc., lib. 3. cap. 39.

Thomas, according to the Syriac import of his name, was called Didymus, which fignifies a Twin. The history of the Gospel takes no particular notice either of the country or kindred of this Apostle. That he was a Jew is certain, and in all probability a Galilean. We have only a few passages in the Gospel concerning him . After our Lord's afcending to heaven, and the miraculous gifts poured down upon the Apostles, the province faid to be affigned to Thomas was Parthia ++. Ferom fays ‡‡, The Apostle Thomas, as we are informed by tradition, preached the Gosfel of our Lord to the Parthians, Medes, Perfians, Caramans, Hyrcanians, Bactrians and Magians; and died in the city Calamin in India. Nicephorus fays III, That he was at first unwilling to venture bimself into these countries, fearing he should find their manners as rude and intrastable as their faces were black and deformed, till encouraged by a vision, that assured him of the divine presence. He travelled a great way into these eastern countries, as far as the island Taprobane (which some alledge is that now called Sumatra) and even to

U 4

Inde triumphantem fert India Bartholomaum, Matthaum eximium Naddabar alta virum.

^{*} Apud Surium ad diem 21. Septembris, Vol. 3. pag. 217.

⁺ Socrates, lib. 1. cap. 19. + Venantius Fortunatus de spe vitæ æternæ.

^{||} In Synopsi.  Matth. x. 3. John xi. 16. xiv. 5. and xx. 24-30. ++ Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 1. || Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 40.

to the country of the Brachmans, preaching every where with all the arts of mild persuasives, and calmly instructing them in the principles of Christianity. By these means he brought the people over from the grossest idolatry to the hearty belief and entertainment of religion. Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre has the same things concerning this Apostle's preaching, as Jerom; an as to his death, he says, That Thomas was killed at Calamin, a city of India, by a launce, and is there benourably buried*.

When the Portugueze came to trade to the East-Indies, in the fixteenth century, they tell us, " That from an-" cient monuments, writings and confunt tradition, which the Christians they found in these parts preserved, they learned that St. Thomas came first to Socotra, an ifle in the Araban fea, and thence to Cranec gener, where having converted many, he travelled far-" ther to the East, and preached the Gospel with good fuccess, and returned to the kingdom of Coromandel, where at Maijur the Metropolis, near to the place " where the river Ganges flows into the gulf of Bengala, he 66 begun to erect a place for divine worship, till he was es prohibited by the priefts, and the Sagamo or Prince " of the country. But upon convictions by feveral or miracles, the work went on; the Sagamo himself em-" braced the Christian Faith, and his example was fol-" lowed by great numbers of his friends and fubjects. "The Brackmans fearing this would spoil their trade, and extirpate the Religion of their country, purfued the " Apoille to a tomb, whither he used to retire for his 66 devotions: while he was at prayer, they load him with " darts and stones, and one of them run him through with a launce. His disciples took up his body, and 66 buried it in a Church he had lately built, which was 66 afterward improved into a fabric of great magnifi-66 cence." From these early plantations of Christianity in the East-Indies, there is said to have been a continued fuccession of those called Christians of St. Thomas in these parts unto this day. The Portugueze found them in great numbers at their first arrival inseveral places, no less than sisteen or sixteen thousand samilies. They are very poor, and their Churches generally very mean and fordid, wherein they had no image of the faints, nor any representation but that of the cross. They are all governed by the Patriarch of Muzal. They promiscuously receive all to the holy communion, which they give under both kinds of bread and wine; tho' instead of wine, which their country wants, they make use of the juice of raisins steeped in water, and pressed out. Children are not baptized, except in case of sickness, till the fortieth day. Every Lord's-day they have prayer and preaching, where their devotions are managed with reverence and solemnity. Their Bible, at least their New-Testament, is in the Syriac language; to the study whereof their preachers exhort their people. They obferve Advent and Lent, and some solemn festivals. They have fome kind of monafteries of Religious, who live in great abstinence and charity. Their priests are shaven in fashion of a cross, have leave to marry once, but are denied for a second time. No marriages are dissolved but by death. These rites and customs they solemnly pretend to have derived from the very time of St. Thomas, and with the greatest care observe them to this day. But of these Christians of St. Thomes in Malabar, we shall have further occafion to discourse in the seventh Chapter of this book, and therefore I nowleave them, and go on to the other Apostles.

* In Synopfi de vita & morte Apostolorum.

⁺ Mafiæi Hift. rerum Indicarum, lib. 2. pag. 85——88. Oforius de Reous Emanuelis, lib. 3. pag. 119. Apud Dr. Care's Lives of the Apostles.

James the Less, called by the ancients James the Just, and by the Apostle Paul, James the Lord's brother, Gal. i. 19. being the Son of Joseph, afterwards husband to the blessed Virgin, as is probable by his first wise. Hence the blessed Virgin is called Mary the mother of James and Joseph, Matth. xxvii. 56. and by Mark, Chap. xv. 40. the mother of James the Less, and of Joseph and Salome; and the same person is called, John xix. 25. the Mother of Jesus. We have no mention in facred Scripture of the place of his birth, or of his trade or way of life, before he was called to be a Disciple and Apostle, nor any particular account of him, during our Saviour's life. After our Lord's Refurrection he was honoured with a manifestation of his master, I Cor. xv. 7. After that he was feen of James. He was principally active at the Synod of ferufalem, in the great controversy about the Mosaic Rites. The case being opened by Peter, and further debated by Paul and Barnabas; at last the Apostle James flood up, Ass xv. 13-22. and gave fentence, that the disciples should not be troubled with the Mosaic Rites. or the bondage of the Jewish Yoke; only for a present accommodation a few indifferent things should be obferved: and ushers in his opinion with a positive determination, Ver. 19. Διὸ ἐτω κρίνω, Wherefore my sentence is. Peter, tho' in that council, produced no such intimation of his authority; if he had, the Champions for the Church of Rome would have made a great noise with it to affert his judicative power. This Apostle wrote the canonical Epistle of James, which is placed before those writ by Peter; and Peter himself seems to have stood in awe of him, to that degree, as to run into an unwarrantable diffimulation, Gal. ii. 11, 12. He was a perfon of eminent parts, prudence and discretion, and therefore had a great share of the management of the affairs of the Church in general, and of the Church at Jerusalem in particular.

After the fynod at Jerusalem, he administred his office of Apostleship with great fidelity, care and success, so as to awaken the malice of his enemies to conspire his ruin. They were vexed that Paul had escaped their hands, by appealing to Cæsar, and therefore turn their revenge against James. Not being able to essectuate their design under Festus's government, they got it accomplished under the Procuratorship of Albinus his successor. Josephus has the story thus ; "Ananus, of the sect of the Sadducees, was then high-priest: These men are severe justiciars; and since it was so, he thought he had got a proper time, when Festus was dead, and Albinus on his journey, to call a council of the judges, where James the brother of Jesus Christ, and some others, are condemned as guilty of impiety, ^{} Antiquitat. lib. 20 cap, 8.

" and ordered to be stoned to death; which displeased all good men in the city." Eufebius out of Egesippus has the story more fully. The sum of his account is +, "The Apostle James having with great freedom and "affurance preached Jesus the Son of God to be the Saviour of the world, and he being a just and excel-" lent person, who had drunk neither wine nor strong "drink from his mother's womb, neither had a razor " come upon his head, but lived continually in praying " and wreftling with God - Many believed his do-" Etrine, even some of the princes and rulers; and there-" fore the Scribes and Pharifees were afraid, left the peo-" ple should believe that Jesus was the Messiah, and did exhort James to go up to the pinacle of the temople, and inform the multitude who were gathered to "the feast of the passover, that Jesus was not the Mes-" siah. But he on the contrary said, Why do ye enquire of me concerning Jesus the son of man? He sits in heae ven at the right hand of mejesty on high, and will come " in the clouds of heaven. The people below hearing " this, glorified God, and proclaimed, Hosanna to the " fon of David! The Scribes and Pharifees being vexed "that they had lost their design, cried out, Justus was " become an impostor, and threw him down from the " place where he flood: Tho' bruifed with the fall. " yet he got upon his knees, and prayed to heaven " for them; but they still enraged, began to load him "with a shower of stones, till one more mercifully " cruel than the rest, came behind, and with a Fuller's " club beat out his brains. Thus died this good man in " the 96th year of his age, 24 years after Christ's ascen-" fion, fays Epiphanius *." In the infeription of his epistle he stiles himself, A servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ. The epistle is directed to the Jewish converts fcattered abroad, that is, in the eastern countries: The design thereof is to comfort them under their sufferings, and to confirm them against error. He observed a degeneracy of manners creeping on, that the purity of the Christian Faith began to be undermined by the loose doctrines doctrines and practices of the Gnoflics, men who declaimed against good works, as useless and unnecessary, afferting a naked belief of the Christian Doctrine sufficient to salvation. Against these the Apostle reasons strongly, pressing Purity, Patience, Charity, and all the virtues of a good life; and by undeniable arguments proves, that the Faith which carries along with it purity, obedience to the commands of God, and a holy life, can only suffigure God, and intitle us to eternal life.

The Apostle Simon is called the Canaanite, from the Hebrew word Cana, to be zealous: hence he is called Simon Zelotes, or the Zealot*, as Nicepborus conceives, from his zealous desire to advance religion in the world. The feveral natural dispositions of the Apostles, did tend to qualify them for fo difficult a work, as building up the New Testament Church, against all the opposition of the world; and also to be mutual checks, incitements and affiftants to one another, as is more fully illustrated by the learned Mr. Fleming +. Simon being invested with the apostolical office, little further mention is made of him in the history of the Gospel. He continued with the rest of the Apostles, till their dispersion up and down the world, and then applied himself to the execution of his charge. Nicephorus says ||, He having received the holy Stirt, travelled through Egypt, Cyrene, Afric, Mauritania and Libya; nor could the coldness of the climate kinder him from shipping himself, and the Christian Dodrine, to the western ocean, even to Britain its If, where be preached and wrought many miracles. And after enduring many troubles and affictions, he with great chearfulncis suffered death on the cross, and so passed to the enjoyment of his master. Derotheus fays t, He was crucified and buried in Britain.

Jude the Apostle, in the history of the Gospel is called both by the name of Thaddæus and Lebbæus, Matth. x. 3. Mark iii. 18. and that none might confound the righteous with the wicked, he is called Jude the brother of James, Iude ^{*} Lukevi. 15. Acts i. 13.

[†] Loganthropos, Book 3. Chap. 2. pag. 218, &c. Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 40. ‡ In Synopsi.

Jude ver. 1. and Judas, not Iscariot, John xiv. 22. As to his descent and parentage, he was of our Lord's kindred; Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren James and Joses, and Simon and Judas? Matth. xiii. 55. Nicephorus makes him the fon of $fose_l b$, and brother to fames called bishop of ferusalem . After our Lord's ascending to heaven, Eusebius says +, Thomas, one of the twelve Aprilles, diffatched Thaddaus, one of the feventy disciples, to Abgarus governour of Edeffi, where he heared diseases, wrought miracles, expounded the detrines of Christianity, and converted Abgarus and his people to the faith. Fr all this, the governour ordered gold and filter to be given to him, which he refused, saying, They had little reason to receive that from others, which themselves had freely relinquished. A large account of the whole story is extant in Eusebius, translated, as he says, out of Syria:, from the records of the city of Edeffa. Ferom makes this Thaddaus to be the same with the Apostle Jude ||. This cannot be easily reconciled with Eusebius, who fays, He was one of the seventy disciples; which he would not have faid, had he been of the twelve. Nicephorus reports, That Judas, not Iscariot, but the brother of James, at his first setting out to preach the Gospel, went up and dow Judæa, Galilee, Samaria and Idumæa, and also through the cities of Syria and Mesopotamia, and at last came to Edessa, the city of Abgarus, where Thaddaus, one of the seventy, had been before him, and there perfected what the other had begun. And having by his fermons and miracles established Christ's kingdom, be died a peaceable and quiet death + Tho' Dor theus makes him to have been killed at Berytus , and honourably buried there; By the consent of many writers of the Latin church, says Dr. Cane ++, he is faid to have travelled into Persia, where, after great success in his apostolic ministry, for many years together, he was at last, for his free and of enre; ruing the superstitious rites of the Magi, cruelly put to death, He has ^{} Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 40. + Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 13.

In Martheum, cap. x. ver. 3.

[‡] Nicephori Hift. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 40. †* In Synopfi de Apostolis. – †† Lives of the Apostles, pag. 155.

has left one epiftle of univerfal concern, infcribed to all Christians.

In all the lifts of the Apostles which we have in the Gospel, Judis Iscariot is last named. Tho' he had no confiderable hand in propagating Christianity, for he came to a wretched end foon after he betrayed his mafter; yet fince I have discoursed of the rest, I shall offer a few things concerning him. As to his Surname Iscariot, he feems to have had it because he kept the purse. For 'tis rationally conjectured by Dr. Hammond and others, that this was a name derived from the Syriac language, where the word fignifies a purle, and fo it denoted the purse-bearer. If it be enquired why our Lord made choice of fuch a man? I answer, with the learned Mr. Fleming*, for the reasons following: First, Because the Scripture must be fulfilled, that our Lord was to be betrayed by one of his own disciples, or supposed friends, Aas i. 16. Psal. xli. 9. 2dly, Because our Lord would this way lay an obligation upon Christians to make a necessary diflinction between a man's qualifications as a minister, and his commission to it as an office; and that we may believe that a minister's mission may be valid, tho' he himfelf be unfanctified. Judas was chosen an Apostle as well as the reft. 3dly, Because Christ would let us know that no Church-fociety on earth can be supposed ever to be so pure, but that some Judas may creep in. 4thly, Because our Lord would have us understand by his practice by what rule we ought to proceed, both in admitting men into a Christian Society, and into a distinct order of offices, and also in casting them out from thence. Our Lord knew from the first, that Judas was an ill man, Job. vi. 70, 71. but he feemed to have the ordinary qualifications of piety and parts. He did counterfeit the good man. He did shew that he was a man of parts, being entrusted with the purse, which he managed with address and cunning; his conduct in his treachery, giving the fign to the fervants of the high-prieft, by kiffing his mafter, thews equal cunning and confidence. A vifible des et in these qualifications, that can be made evi-^{*} Loganthropos, Vol. 2. pag. 170. & feqq.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.

303 evident, as it was in Judas, is just ground to turn a man out of a facred office. But I leave the Traitor, and proceed to

Matthias. He was not an Apostle of the first election, chosen immediately by our Saviour, but one who by divine designation succeeded Judas the Traitor, in the office he had forfeited. We are not then to expect any thing remarkable of him in the history of the Gospel. He was one of our Lord's Disciples, probably of the Seventy who had attended him, during the whole time of his public ministry. Judas Iscariot having betrayed his Lord, came to a fatal end, for he went and hanged bimself, Matth. xxvii. 5. and falling down burst asunder, and his bowels gushed out, Acts i. 18. A vacancy being thus made in the college of Apostles, as soon as they returned from mount Olivet, where our Lord took his leave of them, when he afcended up into heaven, they went into an upper room, which, Nicephorus fays +, was in the house of John the Evangelist, on Mount Zion, and there elected a fit person to supply the vacancy. Peter opened the affair with an excellent speech, and two were propounded in order to the choice; Joseph, called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, whom some make one of the brothers of our Lord; and Matthias. Prayer being made, that divine providence might direct the choice, the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbered with the Eleven Apostles. The Holy Ghost being given to him, he betook himself to his charge. The first fruits of his Apostolate he spent in Judæa, where he reaped a confiderable harvest. We have little certainty after this concerning him, only Dorotheus fays ||, He preached the Gospel to barbarous men in the Inner-Æthiopia, where is the port of Hyssus, and the river Phasis; (which character, as Dr. Cave remarks *, are applicable to Cappadocia) and died at Sebastopolis, and is buried near the temple of the sun. Nicepborus tells us ±, That with great courage and intrepidity he suffered martyrdom.

Having

⁺ Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 1.

In Synopsi, de vita & morte Apostolorum, * Lives of the Apostles, pag. 159.

[‡] Hift. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 40.

Having viewed the first planting of Christianity by the Apostles, from the unquestionable records of the sacred Scripture, and so far as the imperfect remaining accounts of the ancients give us any light; it must be also acknowledged that the Evangelists, and other apostolic men, did contribute very much to this good work. But I shall only take notice of a few of them.

It is reported by Eusebius*, "That Mark the Evan" gelist was sent into Egypt by the Apostle Peter to " plant Christianity in those parts; where so great was " the fuccess of his ministry, that he converted multi-"tudes both of men and women, not only to em-66 brace the Christian Religion, but to a more than or-" dinary strict profession of it." Some conceive that the book of Philo the Jew, $\pi c \rho i$ $\beta i o v$ $\theta \epsilon o \rho \epsilon \tau \iota \kappa o v$, that is, of a contemplative life, which is yet extent, speaks of their peculiar rites and way of life. But that book does not treat of Christians, but of Jews, and professors of the Mosaic Religion, and especially of that sect called Essens. Mark did not confine his preaching to Alexandria, and the Oriental parts of Egypt; but, if we may believe Nicephorus +, "he removed also westward, going "through the countries of Marmorica, Pentapolis, and others in these parts of the world, where the people were barbarous in their manners, and idolatrous in 66 their worship: yet by his preaching and miracles God opened a way for their entertaining the glorious Go-66 spel, and he left them not, till he had not only gained them, but confirmed them in the profession of it. Re-" turning to Alexandria, he preached there, fet the af-" fairs of the Church in order, and conflituted gover-" nours and pastors. But about the time of Easter, " when the Heathens kept the folemnities of their Idol " Serapis, they broke in upon St. Mark, and by their " hands he fuffered martyrdom, and had his bones burnt " to ashes".

Luke, the beloved physician, was born at Antioch, the nectropolis of Syria, educated in the Greek and Egyptian learning, converted probably by Paul, during his abode

[#] Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 16. + Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. chap. 43.

abode at Antioch. After his coming into Macedonia, he was his constant companion, and is frequently mentioned in the Epistles, as with that Apostle, 2 Tim. iv. 11. Col. iv. 14. and fome think, this is the brother, whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the Churches of Christ, 2 Cor. viii. 18. His way and manner of writing is accurate and exact, his style polite and elegant, sublime and losty, yet perspicuous, and expresses himself in very pure Greek. He relates divers things more copiously than the other Evangelists. 'Tis not necessary to determine the precise time when his Gospel was written. Some think it was written in Achaia, during his travels there with Paul. Jerom*, and some of the ancients tell us, " That during "the time Paul was prisoner at Rome, preaching in his " own hired house, and Luke there attending him, he " wrote the Gospel, and the history of the Acts of the 66 Apostles, which is a continuation of the affairs of " the New-Testament Church, to the reign of Nero." Many excellent books have been formed in a prison or confinement. If this was so, 'twas about the 27th year after Christ's ascention, and the fourth year of Nero's reign. In his Gospel he declares what had been delivered to him by those, who from the beginning were eye-witnesses and ministers of the Word, Luke i. 2. And in the history of the Atts, he writes what he himself had seen. We need have no recourse to the authority of Peter to support the Gospel of Mark, or to say with Jerom +, That it was writ according to what Peter told him; nor to the authority of Paul to support the writings of Luke. For both these Evangelists, tho' they were not Apostles, yet they were Disciples, who companied with the Apostles all along, Ats i. 21. and received the Holy Spirit, and were divinely inspired in writing the canon of the Scripture. Concerning Luke, Jerom adds ||, That he lived 84 years, and never had a wife, and is buried at Constantinople, to which city his relicks, and those of Andrew the Apostle.

sipulus É interpres Petri, juxta qued Petrum referentem audiérat.

| Catal. Scrip. Eccles. in Luca.
| Catal. Scrip. Eccles. in Luca.

Vol. I.

Apostle, were carried out of Achaia, in the 20th year of the Emperor Constantine.

Philip was one of the Deacons ordained in the 6th Chap. of the Asts. He went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ to them, and the people with one accord gave beed to the things which he stake, hearing and seeing. the miracles which he did; for unclean spirits crying with a loud voice, came out of those that were possessed with them, and many taken with salfies, and that were lame, were healed; and there was great joy in that city: Acts viii. 5-8. Simon the Magician, aftonished at these mighty things, professed himself a profesyte, and was baptized. "After this, Philip is commanded to go toward the South, "the way that goes from Jerusalem to Gaza; here he " converts a man of Æthiopia, an Eunuch of great au-"thority under Candace, Queen of the Æthiopians, who " had the charge of her treasure, and had come to " Jerusalem to worship." This Eunuch being returned to his country, preached and propagated the doctrine of the Christian Faith, and spread abroad the glad tidings of our Saviour. On which account Jerom fays*, He was fent as an Apostle to the nation of the Æthiopians: and Cyril + makes that prediction of the Psalmist, to be fulfilled in him, Æthiopia shall stretch forth her hands unto God. I shall have occasion in another part of this reffay to speak more concerning the Church of Æthiopia. The traditions of that country, which I reckon very uncertain, fo far as they relate to these ancient times, tellus t, That the Eunuch being returned home, converted his mistress Candace to the Christian Faith, and afterwards, by her leave, propagated it through Æthiopia, till meeting with Matthew the Afostle, by their joint endeavours they expelled idolatry out of those parts; which being done, he crossed the Red-sea, and preached the Christian Religion in Arabia, Persia, India, and in many of those eastern countries, till at length in the island Taprobane, which some ^{*} Com. in Isai. 53. Operum Tom. 5. fol. m. 91 - Et Apostolus genti Æthiopum missus est.

[†] Cyrilli Catechesis 17. pag. 457. ‡ Godign. de Rebus Abasinis, lib. 1. cap. 18. pag. 117.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.—III. 307 call now Ceylon, and others Sumatra, he fealed his doctrine with his blood.

Leaving the Apostolic Age, I proceed to take a view of the Christian Church from thence to the time of Confantine the Great, for the space of at least 200 years, and shall principally remark what progress Christianity made in the world, to the overthrow of heathenish idolatry, and what contributed to the same; not forgetting the persecutions the Christians endured by the heathens, and some other things necessary to be opened in this period, so far as they concern the subject which I have undertaken.

The wonderful spreading of the Gospel, in the time of the Apostles, over most parts of the then known world, which we have already accounted for, is indeed aftonishing: and what follows is no less; especially if we confider that Christianity, from the spirituality of its precepts, the fublimeness of its principles, its tendency to suppress lusts and corruptions, and its contrariety to the idolatry and superstition which had obtained a footing in the woild for some thousands of years, was like to meet with bad entertainment, and the fiercest opposition. Indeed in fact it did meet with all the discouraging opposition that Satan or his instruments could muster up against it; all the fecret undermining, and open affaults which malice and prejudice, wit and parts, learning and power, were able to make upon it. Notwithstanding all which, it prospered; which demonstrates, that the power of Almighty God did accompany our holy religion. That the despited doctrine of the cross of Christ should prevail univerfally against the allurements of flesh and blood, against the blandishments of the world, the rage and perfecution of the kings of the earth, against the witchcrafts of heretics, the learning and eloquence of orators and philosophers, and the power of the Roman empire; that it should conquer without arms, persuade without rhetoric, overcome enemies, disarm tyrants, and subdue empires; this proves its original to be divine, and its Protector God Almighty.

No

No fooner did Christianity set up its standard, but persons from all parts, of all kind of principles and denominations, began to flock to it, as Origen tells Celfus*; That many, both Greeks and Barbarians, wife and unwife, contend for the truth of our Religion, even to the laying down their lives, a thing not known to any other profession in the world. And he challenges him to shew such an unspeakable number of Greeks and Barbarians reposing such a confidence in Æsculapius, as he could shew of those who had embraced the Faith of the Holy Jesus. When: Celsus objects, That Christianity was a clandestine Religion, that crept'up and down in corners; Origen answers ||, That the Religion of the Christians was better known through the world than the distates of their best philosophers. Nor were they mean and ignorant persons only, that came over to Christianity, but as Arnobius observes ‡, " Is not this an 44 argument for our faith, that in fo little a space of time, " the Sacraments of Christ's great name are diffused over "the world? That there is no nation fo barbarous " and cruel, that has not laid afide its rudeness, and 66 turned meek and tractable; that orators, grammass rians, rhetoricians, lawyers, physicians, and philoso-" phers, men of great genius, love our religion, despissing those things wherein before they trusted? That servants " will rather fuffer torments by their masters, wives sooner " part with their husbands, and children chuse to be disinherited by their parents, rather than abandon the Christian Faith?" Tertullian addressing himself to the Roman governours, in behalf of the Christians, assures them , That the' Christians be as strangers of no long standing, yet they had filled all places of their dominions, their cities, islands, castles, corporations, councils, armies, tribes, the palace, fenate, and courts of judicature, only they had left to the heathens their temples. They are fit and ready for war, tho' they yield themselves to be killed for their religion. Had they a mind to revenge themselves, their numbers were great enough to appear in open arms, having a party

^{*} Contra Celsum, lib. 1. pag. 21, 22. † Ibid. lib. 3. pag. 124.

| Ibid. lib. 1. pag. 7. † Adversus Gentes, lib. 1. pag. m. 53.

 Apolog. contra Gentes, cap. 37. pag. m. 46. cum notis Pameliš;
Edit. Col. 1617.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I. -III. 309

not in this or that province, but in all quarters of the world. Nay, should they all but agree to retire out of the Roman empire, what a loss would there be of so many subjects? The world would be amazed at the folitude, and defolation which would ensue upon it; all things would be stupid and filent, as if the city were dead in which you reign; you would have more enemies than friends; whereas now your enemies are fewer, because of the multitude of Christians; almost all your subjects and best citizens consisting of Christians. Will you chuse rather enemies to mankind, than enemies to human errors? Who would defend you, if we were gone, from these fiends that ruin your souls and your health, which we now drive away without price or reward? It would be more than a sufficient revenge to us, that your city, if we were gone, would be an empty possession to un-clean spirits: and therefore Christianity is not to be called a trouble to your cities, but a favour; nor are we to be accounted enemies to mankind, but only adversaries to human errors. The fame learned author, writing to Scapula, deputy of Afric, then perfecuting the Christians, defires him to consider *, That if he went on with his persecution, what be would do with those many thousands both of men and women, of every rank and age, that would readily offer themfelves? What fires or swords must be have to dispatch them? Carthage itself must be decimated, his own friends and acquaintance, the principal men and matrons in the city . will suffer. If you spare not us, spare your self, spare Carthage; bave pity on the province.

Pliny the younger, tho' a heathen, confesses to the Emperor †, "That the cause of the Christians was a matter worthy of deliberation, by reason of the multitudes who were concerned; for many of each fex, of every age and quality, were and must be called in question: This superstition, says be, having infected and over-run not the city only, but towns and coun-[&]quot;and over-run not the city only, but towns and countries, the temples and facrifices being generally defolate and forfaken." Justin Martyr tells Tryphon the ^{*} Tertul. ad Scapulam, cap. 15. pag. m. 92. † Plin. Epist. lib. 10. ep. 97. ad Trijanum.

X 3

Few*, "That however they might boast of the uni-" verfality of their religion, there were many nations " and places of the world, whither they nor it ever " came; whereas there was no part of mankind, whe-"ther Greeks or Barbarians, or by what name foever " they be called, even the most rude and unpolished na-"tions, where prayers and thankfgivings were not made " to the great Creator of the world, through the name " of the crucified Jesus." Lactantius says +, " That " the Christian Law is entertained from the rifing of the " fun to the going down thereof, where every fex, age, " nation and country does with one heart and foul wor-" ship God." If from generals we descend to particulars, Irenaus, who entred Bishop of Lyons in the year of our Lord 179, informs us ‡, "This Preaching of " the Gospel, and this Faith the Church scattered up " and down the whole world maintains, as inhabiting one house, and believes it with one heart and foul, 46 teaches and preaches it as with one mouth; for tho' " there be different languages in the world, yet the force of tradition, or of that doctrine that has been "delivered to the Church, is but one and the fame. The "Churches which are founded in Germany do not believe " otherwise than those in Stain, France, Egypt and Libya, " as well as those in the middle of the world." Tertutlian, who wrote probably not above twenty years after Ireneus, gives a larger account ||, " Their found, fays he, " went through all the earth, speaking of the Apostles: "In whom but in Christ, who is now come, have all 56 these nations believed? Even Parthians, Medes, Ela-" mites, the inhabitants of Mc/opotamia, Armenia, Phry-" gia, Cappadocia, Pontus, Afia and Pamphilia, those " who dwell in Egypt and the region of Afric, which is " beyond Cyrene, strangers and denizens at Rome, Jews " at Jerusalem, and the rest of the nations; as also 66 many of the Getuli, many borders of the Moors, the Dialog. cum Tryphone, operum pag. 345. Edie. Colon. 1686. De Justicia, lib. 5. cap. 13. pag. m. 433.

Adversus Hereics, lib. z. cap. z. pag. m. 39.

Adverfus Judwos, cap, 7. pag. m. 98.

Chap. 3. Christian Religion, Cent. I. - III. 311 utmost bounds of Spain, divers nations in Gaul, and those places of Britain, inaccessible to the Roman 44 armies, have yielded subjection to Christ; (under " which expression, by the by, seems to be meant Scotland) " and also the Sarmatians, the Dacians, the Germans and Scythians, with many obscure countries and pro-" vinces, many iflands and places unknown to us, which, " fays be, I cannot reckon up. In all which the name of "Christ reigns, because he is now come; before whom " the gates of all cities are fet open, and none fhut; be-" fore whom doors of brafs fly open, and bars of iron " are fnapt afunder; that is, those hearts once possessed " by the devil, by faith in Christ are set open." And afterward he demonstrates, that the kingdom of Christ is more extensive than any of the four great monarchies. To which add another passage of Arnobius. He, whenfpeaking of the fuccess of the Gospel, says*, "We " may enumerate and make a profitable computation of those things done in India, among the Persians, the " Seres and the Medes; and also in Arabia, Egypt, Asia, Syria, Galatia, Cappadocia, among the Parthians, Phry-" gians, in Achaia, Macedonia, and Epirus; and in all isles " and provinces that the rifing or fetting fun shines upon; " even at Rome itself, the empress of all, where men " educated in King Numa's arts and ancient superstition,

" have forfaken the fame, and heartily embraced the " truth of the Christian Religion."

As shadows of the night do evanish at the rising of the fun, fo did the darkness of heathenish idolatry and superfittion fly before the light of the Gospel: the more it prevailed, the more clearly it discovered the folly and impiety of their worship. Their solemn rites appeared tri-Aing and ridiculous; their facrifices barbarous and inhuman; their Dx mons were expelled by the meanest Chri- : stian; their oracles became dumb and silent; their very priefts began to be ashamed of their magic charms, and the more fubtle heads among them who stood up for the rites and folemnities of their religion, were forced to run them into mystical and allegorical meanings, far either from the intention or apprehension of the vulgar.

* Adversus Gentes, lib. 2, pag. 64. Edit. Froben. 1546.

If we look into the facred Scriptures, we may be well affured of our Redeemer's victory over the enemy of mankind. Immediately after Adam's fall it was prophefied, that the Messiab, the promised feed, should bruise the head of the serpent, Gen. iii. 15. For this purpose the son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil, 1 Joh. iii. 8. When fatan attacked our Lord by his temptations, he triumphed over him, Matth.iv. 1—12. In the time of his public ministry here upon earth he frequently ejected Dæmons out of the possessed: they trembled for fear of his power, and cried out, What have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? Luke iv. 34. Art thou come to torment us before the time? Matth. vili. 29. Torment me not, Mark v. 7. I befeech thee torment me not, Luke viii. 28. When he accompanied the Gospel with power, fatan's kingdom did fall like lightning from heaven, Luke x. 18. At his death he destroyed the devil, Heb. ii. 14. He spoiled principalities and powers, and triumphed over them on the cross, Col. ii. 14, 15. At his glorious ascending up on high, he led captivity captive: he broke satan's chains, and delivered poor captives from them. He'll sit at God's right hand till he make his enemies his footstool, Pfal. cx. 1. The Gossel, the rod of his strength. is mighty through God, to the fulling down of the strong bolds of this adversary, 2 Cor. x.4. By his spirit he convinces the world of fin, --- and of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged; John xvi. 7-11. And tho' fatan, as far as he can, exerts his limited power, yet is be referved in chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.

If we look into other authors, we shall find this victory of Christ over the devil remarkably confirmed. Almost in every Chapter of the history I now write, we have pregnant evidences thereof; particularly in the first ages of the Christian Church, when the devil, perceiving his kingdom shaking, sought by all means to support it, then the ruin thereof quickly advanced. The heathen oracles were struck dumb; the samous oracle at Delphos, which

which both Greeks and Romans confulted at or before our Saviour's incarnation, had lost its reputation, and began to cease to give any answers, as the response mentioned by Suidas*, as at the foot of the page, and from him copied by Hottinger +, and others, does plainly import. Of the vanity and imposture of the oracles of the heathen, the curious may fee what Eufebius has with great learning advanced in his fourth and fifth books of Evangelical Preparation. But I shall prove that these oracles were silenced about the time of our Redeemer's incarnation, by the testimonies of heathen authors who lived and wrote near that time. Lucan speaks of the Delphic oracles as a great favour, but that they are now filent, since kings did fear things to come, and forbad the Gods to speak #. Juvenal fays, The Delphic oracles have ceased, and left mankind under darkness as to things to come ||. Lucian owns, That while he dwelt at Delphi, the oracles gave no answers, the Tripos spake not, nor was the friest inspired . Plutarch. who lived in the time of the Emperor Trajan, wrote a particular tract, which is yet extant, concerning the ceasing of oracles, which he endeavours to resolve by natural, moral and political causes. But all his philosophy was not able to give a just and satisfying account of it, fince he neglected the main spring of the whole, that is, Christ's victory over the devil. There is one cause

* Suidas in Augusto. + Hist. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 35.
Παίς Έβραῖ Φ κέλε αι με Θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων, Τόν δε δόμον περλιπάν, κ) ἀίδην αὖθις ἰκέδαι.
Λοιπὸν ἄπιθι σιγῶν ἐκ βωμῶν ἡμε[ές αν.
That is,

A Hebrew Boy who reigns in Heavens high, To leave these Altars hath commanded me, And pack to Hell, to Silence and to Woe: Then therefore silent from our Altars go.

‡ Lucani Pharfalia, lib. 5. ver. 111.

—Non ullo facula dono
Nostra carent majore Desim, quàm Delphica sedes
Quòd siluit, postquam Reges timuere futura, Et superos vetuere loqui.———

that Plutarch affigns, which deferves our notice, viz. the death and departure of those Demons which presided over the oracles. To this purpose he relates a memorable paffage *, " concerning a voice that cried three times "aloud to one Thamus, an Egyptian ship-master and his " company, as he failed by the Echinadæ islands to Italy, " commanding him, when he came near the Palodes, " to make proclamation, that the great Pan was dead; 44 and he had no fooner done fo, but there was heard a " mighty noise, not of one, but of many together, who 66 feemed to groan and lament, and make a great wonder. " Tiberius the Emperor fent for Thamus, who satisfied " him of the ftory, and he enquired diligently who this " Pan was." The circumstances of the time when this happened, as Eufebius observes †, corresponds with the time of our Lord's conversing in the world, and disposfeffing Demons; or, as others remark, with the time of our Saviour's passion, when he spoiled principalities and powers, and made a shew of them openly on the cross. That the filence of oracles and the weakning of the power of Demons was the effect of the victory of Christ, and of the Propagation of Christianity, we need no more than the plain confession of Porphyry, an avowed enemy to our religion, who says ||, 'Tis no wonder if the city for so many years has been over-run with sickness, Æsculapius and the rest of the Gods having withdrawn their converse with men; for since Jesus began to be worshipped, no man has received any public help or benefit by the Gods. A great argument, as Eusebius well urges, of our Saviour's divinity, and the truth of his doctrine. In the progress of this history we shall have further evidence that Christianity ruined the empire which the devil had obtained over the heathen world.

Having now feen with what mighty fuccess Christianity displayed its banners among men in several corners of the earth, let us next confider what contributed to this happy event. No doubt the principal cause was, that God in his goodness did then see it the proper time to perform the ^{*} Plutirch's Morals, pag.m. 1331.

⁺ De Prap. Evang, lib. 5. cap. 16, 17. pag. m. 208.

¹ Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. 179.

Chap. 3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.—III. the promifes concerning the Mediator's kingdom, "That " he shall have dominion from sea to sea, from the river " to the ends of the earth; they that dwell in the wil-" dernefs shall bow before him, and his enemies thall lick " the dust; the kings of Tarshish and the isles shall bring " presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts; yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations " shall ferve him: Pfal. 72. Is it a light thing that thou " should be my servant, to raise up the tribes of Jacob, s and to restore the preserved of Israel? I will also " give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest " be my falvation to the ends of the earth, Isa. xlix. 6. " The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, "which shall never be destroyed——It shall break in " pieces and confume all these kingdoms, and it shall " stand for ever, Dan. ii. 44. Then was the time when " our Redeemer shall see of the travel of his soul, and " shall be fatisfied, Isa. liii. 11. When all the ends of the " world shall remember and turn to the Lord, and all 56 the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him; 66 Pfal. xxii. 27." With many other promises of the like nature. Then was the Holy Ghost given, for Jesus was then glorified, Joh. vii. 39. Then did he go forth conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2.

The Christian Religion did carry such effential characters of being given of God, as the only way to save lost sinners from the misery their sins had deserved, (as we have more fully seen in the first Chapter) as thereby to recommend itself to every good and wise man. The miracles of our Lord's birth, life and death, with what were performed by the Apostles, by the powers and gifts of the Holy Ghost, given to them after his Ascension, were so great and so undeniable, so fresh then in the minds and memories of every person, as to convince any insidel, and may to this day fix an abiding impression of the Divinity of our Saviour, and that there is no salvation in any other. I mind here a passage that may be seen in Mr. Fleming's Christology *. He says, "A worthy so Gentleman that travelled through Canaan, told me, that an ingenious person, his fellow-traveller, who was a Deift, used to make merry with all the stories "that the Romift priefts entertained them with, as to the facred places and reliques they went to fee; and se particularly when they first shewed him the clefts of the rock of mount Calvary, which is now included within "the great dome that was built over it by Constantine the Great. But when he came to examine the clefts 46 more narrowly and critically, he told his fellow-travellers, that now he began to be a Christian; for, said 66 be, I have been long a student of nature and the mathematics, and I am fure these clefts and rents in this cock were never made by a natural or an ordinary « earthquake; for, by fuch a concussion, the rock must " have fplit according to the veins, and where it was "weakest in the adhesion of parts; for thus, faid be, I 46 have observed it to have been done in other rocks, "when separated or broken after an earthquake: and Reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here, for the rock is split athwart, and cross the veins, in a most strange and preternatural or suse pernatural manner. This therefore I can eafily and so plainly fee to be the effect of a real miracle, which " neither nature nor art could have ever effected. And "therefore, faid be, I thank. God that I came hither, " to feethis standing monument of a miraculous power, " by which God gives evidence to this day of the Divi-" nity of Christ."

" that

There were allo many things in the primitive Church, for the first two or three centuries, that did very much recommend Christianity to the world, and in divine providence did tend to the happy progress thereof. I shall mention these following.

First, The miraculous powers then bestowed upon the Church, as appears from the first Christian Writers, who are yet extant. Thus Justin Martyr tells the emperor and the senate , "That our Lord Jesus has both the "name of a Man and of a Saviour: he became man, and by the will of God the Father was born of the Virgin "Mary, ^{} Apolog, 1, pag. 45, Edit. Colon, 1686.

Chap.3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.—III. 317 66 Mary, for the falvation of believers, and the over-"throw of Dæmons, which they might know from " things done in their own view; for very many who " had been vexed and poffeffed with Dæmons throughout "the world, and in this very city, whom all their exorcifts and conjurers were not able to relieve, have been " cured by us Christians, through the name of Jesus, " who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and at this very time do still cure them, disarming and driving "out the Damons from those they have possessed." Irenaus, Bishop of Lyons, assures us , "That in his time, "that is, in the fecond century, the Christians who " were truly the disciples of Jesus, enabled by the grace 66 of Christ, did benefits to men, according as they had " received gifts from him to that end. Some ejected $D\alpha$ -" mons and unclean spirits: the persons so dispossessed came over to the Church. Others had visions, and "the gifts of prophecy. Others, by imposition of " hands, healed the fick who laboured under any infirec mity, and reftored them to health: fome raifed the " dead, who continued many years with us. But, fays 66 he, I am not able to reckon up all the gifts, which the " Church through the world, receiving from God, does " every day freely exercise in the name of Jesus Christ, " crucified under Pontius Pilate, to the benefit of nations, neither deceiving nor taking money from them ; " but as they freely received from God, so they freely " give. Neither do they these things, by calling on "angels, nor by charms, nor curious arts, but with purity and plainness, directing prayers to God, "through the name and virtue of our Lord Jesus Christ, " who does all things for the good, and not for the pre-" judice of men." Tertullian challenges the Roman Governors +, " Let any possessed person be brought be-" fore their tribunals, and they shall see that the spirit being challenged or commanded to speak by any Chri-" stian, shall as truly confessitself to be a devil, as be-" fore he fallly boasted himself to be a God," And he tells ^{} Adversus Hæreses, lib. 2. cap. 58. pag. m. 196, 197.

⁺ Apolog.cap.23.pag.39.

tells Scapula the prefect *, "That they rejected, difgra-"ced and expelled Damons every day, as many could bear witness." Origen bids Cellus "take notice, whatever he might think of reports the Gospel makes con-" cerning our Saviour, yet it was the great and magnificent work of Jesus, by his name, to heal even to this day "whom he pleafed +; and that he himself had ‡ seen " many, who by having the name of God and of Christ cal-" led upon them, had been delivered from the greatest evils, " as frenzy and madnefs, and many other diftempers, which " neither men nor Dæmons had been able to cure." And in another place of the same book, Origen says |, " Cel-" fus invents calumnies against the miracles of the bleffed " Jefus, faying they are done by Egyptian arts: but I " will not take my argument only from them, but also " from those done by the Apostles of our Lord, who without these miraculous powers, would never have " been able to move their auditors, nor perfuade them " to defert the superstitions of their country, and em-" brace the doctrine which they preached, and defend it " even to the death. To this day, fays be, the footsteps " of the Holy Spirit, who appeared in the shape of a "dove, is preferved among Christians. They exorcize " Damons, perform cures according to the will of God, " foresee and foretell things to come; at which, tho " Celfus and his personated few may laugh, yet I affirm " further, that many, even against their inclinations, " have been brought over to the Christian Religion, "their former opposition having been fuddenly changed " into a resolute maintaining of Christianity unto death, " after they had visions communicated to them. Several " of this kind we ourselves have seen. God bears " witness, says be, with my conscience, that I do not " endeavour by falfly contrived flories, but by various " powerful influnces, to recommend the religion of the "Holy Jefus." Now from all these testimonies it plain-" ly appears that the miraculous powers bestowed on the "Church, as a remainder of the Apostolic Spirit, did

^{*} Ad Scapulam, cap. 2. † Origenes contra Celfum, lib. 2 pag. 80. ‡ Ibidem, lib. 3. pag. 124. | Origenes contra Celfum, lib. 1. pag. 34.

Chap. 3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.—III. 319 continue till toward the end of the third century, which did very much tend to the overthrow of heathenish idolatry, and to promote the success of the Gospel, notwithstanding all opposition.

A second Advantage that contributed towards the triumph of Christianity, was the singular learning of many who became champions to defend it. It could not but be fatisfying to men of mean capacities and employs, that those of more refined understandings, who could not be eafily imposed upon, did trample on their former opinions, and not only entertained the Christian Faith, but defended it against most virulent opposers. The Gospel, at its first appearing in the World, was publish'd by men of ordinary education, that it might not feem to be an human artifice. But when after 100 years confiderable progress, malice did enflame its adversaries, it was proper to take in external helps to its affiftance. The Christian Apologists, and first writers against the Gentiles, did by rational discourses assoil the Christians of those things charged unjustly against them; justified the excellency, reasonableness and divinity of our holy Religion, and exposed the folly and wickedness of heathenism: by which means, prejudices were removed, and thousands brought over to the Faith. Thus Quadratus Bishop of Athens, and Aristides, formerly a Philosopher in that city, dedicated each an Apologetic to the Emperor Hadrian. Justin the martyr, besides his tract against the Gentiles. wrote two apologies; the first to Antoninus Pius, the second to Marcus Aurelius and the Senate. About the fame time Athenagoras prefented his Apology to the Emperors Marcus Aurelius and Aurelius Commodus, and wrote his excellent difcourfe concerning the Refurrection. To the same Aurelius, Melito Bishop of Sardis did exhibit his apologetic oration. To him also, Apollinaris Bishop of Hierapolis in Asia dedicated his defence of the Christian Faith, and wrote five books against the Gentiles, and two concerning the Truth. Not long after, Theophilus Bishop of Antioch composed his three excellent books for the conviction of Autolycus, and Miltiades prefented an apology, probably to the Emperor Commodus; and Tatian the Syrian, Scholar to Justin Martyr, wrote a book against the Gentiles. Tertullian, a man of great learning, the first among the Latins that appeared in this cause, under the reign of Severus, publish'd his Apologetic, directed to the magistrates of the Roman empire, besides his books ad Gentes, ad Scapulam, and many more. After him fucceeded Origen, whose eight books against Celfus, did great fervice to the Christian cause. Minucius Felix, an eminentadvocate at Rome, wrote a short, but a most elegant dialogue between Ottavius and Cacilius, which, as Lastantius observes *, shews how fit and able an advocate he would have been to affert the truth, had he wholly applyed himself to it. About the time of the Emperors Gallus and Volufian, Cyprian addressed himself in a discourse to Demetrius, Proconsul of Afric, in behalf of the Christians, and published his tract de idolorum vanitate, which is an abridgment of Minucius's dialogue. Toward the close of that age, under Dioclesian, Arnobius, who taught rhetoric at Sicca in Afric, being convinc'd of the truth of Christianity, could hardly at first make others believe he was in earnest; therefore to evidence his fincerity, he wrote feven books against the Gentiles, where he fmartly and rationally pleads the Christians cause. Lastantius, his scholar, professed rhetoric at Nicodemia: He composed several discourses in defence of the Christian, and in subversion of the Gentile Religion. He was an eloquent man, but more happy in attacking his adversaries, than in establishing the principles of his own Religion, some whereof he seems not distinctly to have understood. The works of several of these Fathers are now lost, as the Apologies of Quadratus, Aristides, Melito, and Apollinaris; the rest yet remain, and may be read to advantage. These and other eminent worthies of the church at that time, did give noble antidotes against the heresies of the age; but many of their writings against herefies are now lost, only the works of Irenœus and Tertulian on that subject yet remain.

A third Advantage that helped forward the progress of Christianity, was the indefatigable zeal used in the propagation

^{*} De Justitia, lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. m. 395.

pagation thereof. Every method was effayed to reclaim men from error, and bring them to the acknowledgement of the truth. The teachers of the primitive church preached boldly, prayed heartily for the reformation of mankind, folicited their neighbours who were yet strangers to the faith, instructed and informed new converts. and built them up in their most holy faith. Those who were of greater parts and eminency erected and instructed schools, where they publickly taught such as reforted to them, in the principles of the faith, affording them antidotes both against heathens and heretics. Among us, says Tatian *, not only the rich and wealthy learn our philosophy, but even the poor are freely instructed: for the doctrine concerning God is greater than can be recompensed with gifts; therefore we admit all who are willing to learn, whether old or young. And a little after he fays, All our virgins are sober and modest, and use to discourse of divine things even sitting at their distass. No pains, no travel nor hardships were counted insuperable to enlarge the bounds of the Gospel-Church. The divine and admirable disciples of the Apostles, says Eusebius +, built up the superstructures of the Churches, the foundations whereof the Apostles had laid in all places where they came; they every where promoted the preaching of the Gospel, sowing the seeds of beavenly doctrine through the whole world, to render a more plentiful barvest. For many of the disciples then alive being inflamed with the love of a more heavenly philosophy, fulfilling the counsel of our Lord, distributed their estates to the poor; and leaving their own country, did the work of Evangelists to those who had never yet beard the Christian Faith, preaching Christ, and delivering the evangelical writings to them. No sooner had they planted the faith in any foreign countries, and ordained guides and pastors, to whom they committed the care of these new plantations, but they went to other nations, assisted by the grace and powerful working of the holy Spirit; for the divine Spirit, even to that very time, did perform wonderful works. So soon as ever they began to preach the Gospel

^{*} Tatiani Oratio contra Græcos, pag. m. 167, 168,

⁺ Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 37. VOL. I.

Gossel, the people slocked universally to them, and chearfully and beartily did wership the true God, the Creator of the world, piously and heartily believing in his name. In the number of these evangelical missionaries that were of the sirft Apostolical Succession, were Silas, Sylvanus, Crescens, Andronicus, Trophinus, Marcus, Aristarchus, and others; as afterward Pantænus, who went into India; Pothinus and Irenæus, from Smyrna came into France; and each of these two last became Bishop of Lyons one after another, and many more of that kind mentioned in the histories and martyrologies of the Church, who counted not their lives dear to them, so that they might sinish their course with joy, and make known the mystery of the Gospel to the ends of the earth.

Fourthly, Christianity recommended itself to the world, by the admirable holy lives of its professors, which were fo confonant to the laws of virtue and goodness, as could not but reconcile the unprejudiced part of the Gentile World to a good opinion of them, and vindicate their religion from the abfurd cavils made against it by adversaries. Their holy lives could not fail to shew there was fomething more than human in their worship. The piety of these primitive Christians towards God, their fobriety toward themselves, and their justice, righteousnets and charity toward others, are well explained and illustrated by the learned Dr. Cave, from their own writings, in his book entitled Primitive Christianity. A few testimonies to confirm it, shall suffice us at this time. Eusebius affures us *, These divine and holy men the Apostles of Christ, how rude soever they were in speech, were yet of the most pure and holy lives, and had their minds adorned with all forts of virtue. Indeed fuch generally were the Christians in succeeding ages; they did not entertain the world only with a parcel of good words, but shewed their faith by their works, and proved the divinity of their religion by the heavenliness of their lives. The Christian, in Minutius Felix, says †, "We "defpife the pride and superciliousness of philosophers, " whom we know to be debauched corrupt men, adul-

[#] Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 24. + In Dialogo prope finem, pag. m. SS.

Chap .3. Christian Religion, Cent.I.—III. 323 "terers and tyrants, always eloquent against the vices of which themselves are most guilty. We measure on not wisdom by men's habits, but by their minds and "manners; nor do we speak great things so much as we live them, glorying that we have attained "those things which they [i. e. the Gentiles] sought for, but could never find. Justin Martyr tells the Emperor *, "We Christians have renounced Dæmons, and worship the only unbegotten God through his own " Son. We, who formerly did take pleasure in adulteries, " now embrace the strictest chastity; who used magic " charms, have devoted ourselves to the immortal God. "We, who valued money and gain above all things, " do now cast what we have in common, distributing to every one according to his need. We who by ha-" tred and flaughter raged against each other, and re-" fused to fit at the same fire with those who were not " of our tribe, fince Christ's coming into the world, fa-" miliarly converse together, pray for our enemies, and the conversion of those who unjustly hate us, endea-44 vouring to perfuade them to live according to the ex" cellent precepts of Chrift, that so they may have just ground to hope for the same rewards with us from the God and Judge of the world." Thereafter he informs the emperors of the precepts of holiness given by Christ in his excellent sermon on the mount.

Wonderful was the efficacy of this doctrine over the minds of men, which the Christian Apologists plead at every turn as an unanswerable evidence, that their religion was of God, since it made all forts of men, who received it, chaste and temperate, quiet and peaceable, meek and modest, yea asraid of the least appearance of evil. When the heathens derided them for the mean and unpompous solemnities of their religion; they declared, that God respected no man for external advantages: he delighted in the pure and holy soul; he stood in noneed of blood or smoke, perfumes or incense; the best sacrifice was to offer a mind truly devoted to him, meekness and kindness; an humble heart and an innocent life was the offering with which God was well pleased; a pious soul was the fittest temple for God todwell in; to do duty, to abstain from sin, to be intent upon prayer and praise, the truest festival. This religion of the Christians rendred their profession amiable to the world, and oft forced their enemies to fall down and say, God was in them of a truth.

^{*} Apologia fecunda, pag. 61.

Fifthly, The Christians then gained many Proselytes by their patience and constancy in their sufferings. They entertained the fiercest threatnings with an unshaken mind. They laughed at torments, courted flames, and went out to meet death in its blackest dress. They died rejoicing, and triumphed in the midst of greatest tor-This continuing for some ages almost every day, did convince their enemies, that their religion was true, and that there was a supernatural power that did support them under all these calamities. Lastantius thustriumphs in the cause , " By reason of our wonderful courage, " says be, our number is increased, many flocking to us " from those that worship idols. For when they " fee men torn in pieces by infinite variety of torments, " and yet maintain patience unconquerable, able to tire " out their tormentors, they begin to think, as they " have ground to do, that the conlent of fo many, and " the perfeverance of fuch dying perfons cannot be in " vain and that patience itself, were it not from God, could not hold out under fuch racks and tortures. "Thieves and men of robust bodies are notable to bear " fuch tearing in pieces, they groan and cry out, being overcome with pain, because not endued with patience " infpired from heaven: but our very children and wo-" men, to fay nothing of our men, do with filence con-" quer their tormentors; nor can the hottest fire force " a groan from them. Let the Romans go and boath of "their Mutius and Regulus, of the one for delivering " himself up to his enemies to be put to death, because " he was ashamed to live a prisoner; and the other be-" ing taken by his enemies, did burn his hand to fave " his life, by which he obtained a pardon that he did not " deferve. Behold with us the weaker fex, and the most ^{} De Justicia, lib. 5 cap 13, 14, pog. m. 434, & seqq.

Chap. 3. Christian Religion, Cent. I.—III. 325

"tender age, fuffer all the parts of their body to be " torn and burnt, not out of necessity, for they might " fhun it, but out of choice, because they believe in "God. This is that true virtue which the philosophers "vainly boast of, but never really possessed." This, and more to the same purpose, he there elegantly urges to the honour of our religion. By the force of such arguments Justin Martyr confesses he was brought over from being a Platonic Philosopher to become a Chriftian; for when he observed the Christians, whom he had often heard calumniated, not afraid of terrible deaths. I thought with my felf, fays he , that it was not possible fuch persons could wallow in vice and luxury; it being the interest of vicious people to shun death, to dissemble with magistrates, and to do every thing to save their lives. Tertullian tells Scatula, in the conclusion of his address to him +, 'Tis to no purpose to think this sect will fail, which you'll see the more built up, the faster it is cut down: for who can behold such eminent patience, and not have some scruple in his mind, and begin to inquire the cause of it? and when once he knows the truth, he himself immediately follows it. The Heathen themselves, as Arrian, in his commentary on EpiEtetus, owns ‡, that the Galileans did undergo death and torments with courage, but ascribes it to fury and custom. Lucian, an avowed enemy of the Christians, fays ||, These miserable wretches or devils, οι κακοδαίμονες, do persuade those of their own party that they shall surely be immortal, and live for ever; upon which account they despise death, and many of them offer themselves to it. Hence Julian the Emperor, called the Apostate, counted it policy not to put the Christians openly to death, because he envied them the honour of being martyrs; fince he perceived they were like new mown grafs, the oftner it was cut down, the thicker it fprung up again . We may hear more of the holy lives of the primitive Christians, of their answers to the accusations of the ^{} Apologia prima, operum pag. 50. † Ad Scapulam cap. 5. operum pag. 92. ‡ Lib. 4. cap. 7. pag. m. 407.

Lucian. de morte Peregrini, operum Tom. 2. pag. 763.  Greg. Nazianzen. in Julianum oratio 1.

the Heathen, and their patience under fufferings, in the sequel of this treatise. Mean time what we have advanced does discover several things God in his good providence made use of, for the happy Progress and Propagation of Christianity over the world, notwithstanding all the hardships which Christians then endured: and this, with some other things relating to our subject, may be surther illustrated by a short view of the persecutions raised against the Church, before the time of Constantine the Great.

The first who raised a general Persecution against the Christians, was the Emperor Nero, of whom Tertullian tells the Gentiles, and for the confirmation thereof appeals to their public records*; We glory, fays he, in fuch an author of our Persecution: any body who knows him, may understand, that nothing but what is eminently good could be condemned by Nero. He was a Prince of such brutish and extravagant manners, as their own writers fcruple not to call him a beaft in human shape, the very monster of mankind. He was guilty of the most unbounded pride, ambition, drunkenness, luxury, and all manner of debauchery; yea, of fodomy and incest, which he attempted to commit with his own mother. But cruelty was his predominant; he dispatched the most part of the senate, put to death his own tutor Seneca, Lucan the poet, and many others; nay violated the laws of nature, falling upon his own relations, being privy to, if not guilty of the death of his father Claudius. He killed his two wives Octavia and Poppaa, poisoned his brother Britannicus; and to complete all sent an affassine to kill his mother Agrippina, whom he abhorred for the free admonition she gave him. He wanted, fays Eusebius +, this to be added to his other titles, to be called the first Emperor who perjecuted the Christian Religion. He published laws for suppressing it, and putting to death those who professed it, as appears by an inscription found in Spain ‡; for he feems Inscript. pag. 238. Apud Dr. Cave's Primitive Christianity, pag. 322.

^{*} Apolog.cap.6.pag.23. † Hift. Eccl.lib.2. cap. 25 ‡ Neroni. cl. caes. avg. pont. Max. ob. provinc. Latronib. et. His. QVI. NOVAM. GENERI. HVM. SVPERSTITION. INCVLCAB. PVRGATAM. Gruteri feems to have carried his perfecution even to that country. Among other instances of his madness, he set Rome on fire, in the 10th year of his reign, Anno Dom. 65. The conquering flames reducing the far greatest part of it, even ten regions of fourteen, into ashes, laying waste houses and temples, and all venerable antiquities, and monuments of that place, which had been preferved for fo many ages, with great reverence; Nero himself beholding the same with pleasure from Mecanas's tower. and in the habit of a player, finging the destruction of Troy. When the people would have searched the ruins of their houses for treasures, he forbad them. This act exposed him to the hatred of an injured people, which he endeavoured to remove by promifes and rewards, by confulting the Sybilline books, and public supplication to the Gods. Notwithstanding all this, Tacitus says , The infamy could not be wiped off: the people still believed the burning of the city to have been done by his order. To abolish this rumor, he derived the odium of it upon those who are commonly called Christians, from Christ, who in the reign of Tiberius was crucified under Pontius Pilate. Tho' the superstition was a little borne down, yet it did spread again, not only over Judæa, but even through the city of Rome itself, where, says he, all evil things meet, and are had in reputation. Therefore they were seized who confessed themselves to be Christians, and by their discovery a great multitude, whom not the burning of the city, but common batred made criminal. They were treated, when dying, with all instances of scorn and cruelty, were wrapped up in the skins of wild beasts, and worried by dogs; others were crucified, and others burned alive, that when day-light failed, they might serve for torches in the night. These spectacles Nero exhibited in his own gardens, as if they had been a Circenfian game, himself being among the people in the habit of a coachman. Yet the' severity was used against those, says Tacitus, who deserved death, the people beheld them with pity, as done not for the public good, but to fatisfy she cruelty of one man. This perfecution continued a full. year, even that after the burning of Rom, Anno Dom. 66. Divine ^{} Annalium lib. 15. cap. 44. pag. m. 364.

Divine Providence fo ordered, that the Church had got fome footing in the world before a general perfecution did arife, that Christians might be the better able to weather out the storm. There were now 33 years, or thereabouts, past after Christ's Death, in which the Church had been propagated far and near; nor did the storm continue fo long, as to wear out the Saints of the most High. It raged in other parts of the Empire as well as at the metropolis: In it suffered the Apostle Paul, beheaded at Rome, and also the Apostle Peter, as our Lord foretold, John xxi. 18. but in what year, or in what place, is not certain. Tecla, Torques, Torquatus, Marcellus, and feveral others fuffered also. But there are many legendary frories in the Roman martyrologies, which deferve no credit; concerning which, the curious Reader may confult the learned Spanbeim *.

The short reigns of Galba, Otho and Vitellius, who are called by some, Monthly Emperors, and the merciful disposition of Vespasian and Titus his son, gave some rest to the Christians, till Domitian succeeding to the empire, began a new persecution. He was a man of a temper valily different from that of his father Vespasian, and his brother Titus; he was lazy and unactive, illnatured and fufpicious, griping and covetous, proud and insolent; yea so wickedly ambitious, as to affect divinity in all publick edicts, affuming to himfelf, and requiring others to give him the titles of Lord and God. He never truly loved any man. When he pretended kindness, it was a fign of that man's ruin to whom it was offered. His cruelty he first exercised upon the slies, thousands whereof he dispatched every day; and next he tried it upon men of all ranks, putting to death the most illustrious senators, and persons of greatest honour, upon most trisling pretences, and oft for no cause at all. He bad a portion, fays Tertullian +, of Nero's cruelty, but in this he exceeded him, Nero was content to command exeeutions to be done at a distance, while Domitian took pleasure to see them done before his own eyes. The Christians, ^{*} Hist. Eccl. in Fol. col. 566, & seqq. + Apolog. cap. 6, pag. 23.

Chap. 3. against the Christians by Trajan. 329 alas! did bear the heaviest load of his rage and malice, whom he every where perfecuted either by death or banishment. John the Evangelist was sent for to Rome. and by his order banished into Patmos. He commandded those to be killed who were of the stock of David in Judea*. He put to death his cousin-german Fl. Clemens, at that time consul, for giving a good testimony to Chrift, and banished his wife Fl. Domitilla, his own kinfwoman, into the island Pontia, upon the same account. The Persecution began in the 92d year of the Christian Æra, 26 years after that by Nero, and continued to Domitian's death, which happened about three years after. His bloody practices render'd him intolerable to his own friends and fervants, who conspired against him (his own wife Domitia being of the confederacy) and killed him. His fucceffor Cocceius Nerva abrogated his acts, and recalled those he had proscribed or banished. Among these, John the Apostle took the benefit of the act, quitted Patmos, and retired to Ephesus. Dion, a Roman historian, says +, Nerva absolved all those who were counted guilty of impiety against the gods, and recalled the banished to their own country; by whom he understands the Christians.

The third Perfecution commenced under Trajan, whom Nerva appointed to be his successor. He was a Prince of excellent virtues, who acted usually by the advice of the senate, and they, to recompense him, gave him the title of Optimus. He conversed freely with all men, desiring rather to be loved than seared by the people. The glory of all this is exceedingly stained in the records of the Church, by his severe proceedings against the Christians. He looked upon the religion of the Empire as undermined by this new way of worship; that the number of Christians grew formidable, and might possibly endanger the tranquillity of the Roman state; and that there was no better way to secure to himself the favour of the Gods, especially in the ways, than to vinvindicate himself against the Christians. Accordingly he iffued out orders to proceed against them as illegal focieties, erected and acting contrary to the laws. He look'd upon Christian Assemblies as Heteriæ, or unlawful corporations, and under this pretence endeavoured to suppress them; and in the mean time commanded Christians either to facrifice to the Gods, or be punished as contemners of them. The chief of those who obtain'd the crown of martyrdom in this Persecution were, Clemens Bishop of Rome, Simeon of Jerusalem, and Ignatius of Antioch. The last of these Trajan himfelf condemned, and ordered to be fent to Rome, and there thrown to wild beafts. His defire for martyrdom was great, as his words recorded in Eusebius's + history do declare, "From Syria even to Rome, says he, I fight " with beafts by land and fea, night and day, bound with ten Leopards, that is, a guard of foldiers, who " are worse for the favours I do them. I am instructed by their injuries, yet by this I am not justified. " wish I may enjoy the bealts that are prepared for me, " who I pray may make quick dispatch with me; them "I will allure to devour me speedily, and that from " fear they may not abstain from touching me, as they " have not touched others; and if they will not, I'll even force them thereunto. I know what is best for " me. Now I begin to be a disciple, desiring nothing " of things feen or unfeen, that fo I may gain Christ. Let fire, cross, troops of violent beasts, scattering of bones, convulsion of members, contrition of the " whole body, and all the torments of the devil come "upon me, that I may enjoy Jesus Christ." Jerona adds *, "That when this Ignatius was condemned to be " actually thrown to the wild beafts, and heard the lions roaring, he faid, I am Christ's whear, which the 46 teeth of wild beafts shall grind, that I may be found " pure bread." He died in the 11th year of Trajan.

* Euseb. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 19.

⁺ Dion Cassius in vita Cocceii Nervæ, non long and ar io.

This Perfecution is placed by Eusebius ||, and by many others after him, in the 10th year of Trajan, the 108th of the Christian Æra, tho' I find Spanbenius F. F. thinks ir

Chap. 3. against the Christians by Trajan. 331 it began five years fooner +. It raged, as in other parts of the Empire, fo especially in the provinces of Pontus and Bithynia, where Pliny the younger then governed as Proprætor with proconfular power and dignity; who feeing the vast numbers of Christians, who were indicted by their accusers, and pressed on of their own accord to gain the honour of being martyrs, and that to proceed to feverity with all who came, would be in a manner to lay defolate these provinces, he thought proper to write to the Emperor concerning this matter, that he might know his pleasure concerning it. Since his letter contains a testimony from a Heathen concerning the propagation of the Christian Religion in these times, and also acquaints us so exactly with the state of Christians, their innocency and integrity, and the manner then of proceeding against them, I here insert a translation thereof.

C. Plinius, to the Emperor Trajan.

T is my custom, Sir, in all affairs wherein I doubt, to have recourse to you; for who can bete ter either sway my irresolution, or instruct my ignorance? I have never been heretofore present at the examination and trial of Christians, and therefore know not what the crime is, or how far it is wont to be punished, or how to proceed in these enquiries. Nor was I a little at a loss, whether regard be to be had to the difference of age, whether the young and the weak are to be distinguished from the more strong and aged; whether place may be allowed to repentance, and it may be any advantage to him who was once a Christian, to cease to be so; whether the name alone, without other offences that go along with the name, ought to be punished. In the mean time, towards those, who as Christians have been brought before + Hist. Christiana, Fol. col. 655.

^{*} Plinii lib. 10. Epift. 97. pag. m. 387, & feqq. & apud Euseb. Hist. Cel. lib. 3. cap. 33.

me, I have taken this course; I asked them if they were Christians. If they confessed, I asked them once again, threatning punishment; if they persisted, I commanded them to be executed. For I did not at all doubt but that whatever their confession was, their ftubbornness and inflexible obstinacy ought to be punished. Others who were guilty of the like madness, because they were Roman citizens, I adjudged them to be transmitted to Rome. While things thus proceeded, the error spreading, as is usual, more cases offered. 4 A nameless libel was presented, containing the de-4 fignations of many, who denied themselves to be or have been Christians. These, when after my example they invocated the Gods, and offered wine and incense to your statue, which for that purpose I commanded to be brought, with the images of the Gods, and had · moreover blasphemed Christ, which 'tis said none who are true Christians can be compelled to do, I dismissed. · Others mentioned in the libel confessed themselves · Christians, but presently denied it; they had been such, but had renounced it, fome by the space of three years, others many years fince; and one 25 years ago. All these paid their veneration to your statue, and to the · images of the Gods, and blafphemed Christ. They affirmed the whole fum of their fect or error lay in this, That they used on a set solemn day, to meet together before fun-rifing, and to fing among them-· felves a hymn to Chrift, as the God whom they worshipped; and to oblige themselves by an oath, not to commit any wickedness, but to abstain from theft, robbery and adultery, to keep faith, to restore any pledge intrufted with them; which being done, to depart for that time, and to meet again at a common · meal, to partake of a promiscuous and harmless food, which they laid afide after my Edict, according to ' your order, prohibiting the Heteriæ or unlawful af-· femblies to be kept. To fatisfy my felf in the truth hereof, I commanded two maids, called Diaconesses, to be examin'd upon the rack; but I perceiv'd nothing but a wicked and immoderate superstition, and therefore Chap. 3. against the Christians by Trajan fore delaying any further process, I have sent for your advice. For the case seemed to me worthy to be confulted, especially considering the great numbers that are in danger; for very many of all ages and ranks, both men and women, are and will be called in queftion; the contagion of this superstition having over-fpread not only cities, but towns and country villages, which yet feems possible to be stopt and cured. 'Tis' very evident, that the temples, which were almost quite forsaken, begin to be frequented; that the holy rites and folemnities of a long time neglected, are fet on foot again, and that facrifices from all parts begin

• to be fold, which hitherto found very few to buy them;

whence 'tis easy to conjecture what multitudes might be ' reclaimed, if place be given to repentance.'

This letter feems to be writ about the year of our Lord 107, the ninth of Trajan's Reign, the Emperor lying then at Antioch, in order to his wars in the East, where the perfecution was very hot. By this account we fee, that tho' the enemies of our religion load it with hard names, as a wicked and immoderate superstition, yet at the same time they own it innocent and unblameable. Tho' the feverity of the perfecution might tempt some to turn renegadoes, yet so vast was the propagation and spreading that Christianity had then made in these parts, that this great man Pliny the younger knew not how to deal with them. To direct him therefore in this affair, the Emperor returned him the following Rescript.

Trajan to Pliny greeting. *

S to the manner of your proceedure, my Secundus, in examining the causes of those that have been brought before you for being Christians, you have taken the course you ought to take; for no general · law can be framed fo as to provide for all cases. Let them not be fought for, but if they be accused and convicted, let them be punished. Yet if any denies himself to be a Christian, and gives evidence of it, by fupplicating to our Gods, the heretofore he has been · fuspected, let him be pardoned upon his repentance.

^{*} Plinii Secundi lib. 10, Epist. 98.

But as for libels published without the name of the • authors, let them not be regarded as to the crimes they • charge, for that were an ill precedent, and is not usual in our reign.

Tertullian speaking of this edict, or rescript, calls it +, A sentence confounded by a strange necessity; it allows them not to be fought for, as if they were innocent, and yet commands them to be punished as guilty; it spares and rages, diffembles and yet punishes. Why does he entangle himself in his own censure? If he condemn them, why does he not hunt them out? If he thinks them not to be searched out, why does he not acquit them? However, by means of this law the edge of the enemies was taken off; tho' the popular rage might in some places still continue, yet the general force and rigour of the persecution did cease and abate. About this time Trajan abode at Antioch, where was a dreadful earthquake, by which thousands were killed, and far greater numbers maimed and wounded. Pedo the Conful lost his life, and Trajan himself, had he not escaped out of a window, had undergone the same fate. Afterwards he won great victories over the Armenians, Parthians, Arabians, Assyrians, Iberians Persians. He received embassies from the Indies, tho' their name was little known at that time. He died of a dropfy # at a town in Cilicia, then called Selinus, and afterward Trajanople, in the 64th year of his age, having reigned 19 years, 6 months and 15 days. Pliny the younger wrote an excellent panegyric upon him, which is yet extant. No doubt he was a Prince adorned with many virtues; but his cruelty in perfecuting the Christians, his incontinence in love of boys, and his excess in wine, stain his glory, and shew the flattery of his admirers.

Hadrian, the adopted Son of Trajan, succeeded in the empire, and continued the perfecution of the Christians raised ⁺ Apolog.cap. 2. operum pag. 19.

[#] Dion. Cassius in vita Trajani, prope finema

Chap. 3. against the Christians by Hadrian.

335

raised by his predecessor; or rather was author of a fourth; fo Sulpitius Severus calls it *. 'Tis true we do not find any laws which this emperor made against the Christians, but those of his predecessors were still in force; and the heathens were ready in most places to run upon this errand of their own accord, and to facrifice innocent Christians to their own spite and malice. Jerom particularly tells us +, That this emperor having spent a whole winter at Athens, gave bis presence at the Eleusinian ceremonies, and was initiated in almost all the mysteries and rites of heathenish Greece, which gave occasion to those who hated the Christians without any particular warrant to fall upon them. That this was a grievous perfecution, appears from the apologies which Quadratus and Aristides, tho' now they be lost, presented to the emperor; and from what Tertullian writes +, That when Arrius Antoninus (whom many conceive to be the fame person who succeeded Hadrian in the empire) was Proconful of Asia, and severely persecuted the Christians, the whole of them in that city, where he at the time was, as one man beset his tribunal, openly confessing themselves to be Christians. He, amazed at the multitude, caused some few of them to be executed, telling the rest, that if they had a mind to end their lives, they had precipices and halters enough at home, and need not come hither for execution. And Eusebius informs us, That Serenius Granianus, one of the following Proconsuls, did write to Hadrian to mitigate the persecution: which the emperor commanded to be done by a rescript || directed to Minucius Fundanus, his successor in that province. The like he did in other places of the empire, as appears by Melito's Apology, a part whereof is preserved by Eusebius, lib. 4. cap. 26. Dion Cassius, a heathen, fays , That the Hadrian reigned with great moderation and humanity, yet for putting to death many good men, both in the beginning of his reign, and before he ended his life, he was under great infamy. By these good men he seems to intend the Christians.

* Sacræ Historiæ lib. 2. + Catalog. Scriptorum in Quadreto.

 Xiphilini Epitome Dionis, pag. m. 269.

[‡] Ad Scapulam, cap. 5. pag. 92. {| Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 9. Extat etiam ad calcem Apologiæ secundæ

Just. Martyris, operum pag. 99.

As to the duration of this perfecution, the learned Spanbemius reckons it commenced in the fecond year of Hadrian's Reign, and was stopped in the tenth, which is A. D. vulg. 126. when his Decennalia were celebrated*.

Hadrian was a Prince devoted to the muses, to study and travels, yet one in whom 'tis hard to fay whether vice or virtue hadthe upper hand. He highly honoured the fenate, and would wait on the confuls to their houses, and yet was most ambitious of honour. He punished the revolting Jews, who were headed by Barchochab, who pretended himself to be the Messias. He died in the 21st year of his reign. Tho, there were many who obtained a crown of martyrdom in this perfecution, yet the Greek and Roman Church have filled their martyrologies with fabulous circumstances of several martyrs, and names of others, for which they have no real foundation. therefore we are not rashly to believe every thing writ concerning them by Simeon Metaphrastes, Gregory of Tours, the Clementine Recognitions, and gathered together by Surius, Bolandus, and even by Cardinal Baronius in his annals, to ferve the purposes of the Romish Church, and their legendary traditions of miracles of faints, to support their idolatrous worship +. This Emperor on his death-bed, according to Spartian his historian, spoke concerning his foul like one without God and Hope in this world +; which shews what uncertain expectations the Heathers

* Spanhem. FF. Hist. Christiana in Folio, col. 656, 657.

+ Spanh. FF. Hist. Christ. in Fol. col. 666, & seqq.

‡ Spartiani Hadrianus Cæsar, prope finem.

Animula, vagula, blandula, Hospes, comesque corporis, Qua nunc abibis in loca Pallidula, rigida, nudula?
Nec, ut soles, dabis jocos.

In English.

My little pleafant wandring Soul,
Which in this Body dweils,
To what strange Place dost thou retire,
Pale, rigid naked Cells?
The pretty Jests that thou us'd here,
Thou there no more shall tell.

Ch.3. against the Christians by Antoninus Pius. 337 Heathens had of any future happiness, being destitute of divine revelation.

Antoninus Pius succeeded in the empire; he continued the perfecution, wherein many received the crown of martyrdom, whose names are writ in the lamb's book of life. For stopping the persecution, Justin Martyr exhibited an Apology to the Emperor, which produced the following answer to the common council of Asia *.

" The Emperor Cæsar Titus Ælius Hadrian Antoninus " Augustus Pius High-Priest, the fifteenth time Tribune, "third time Conful, father of his country, to the com-" mon affembly of Asia, greeting. I am very well af-" fured that the Gods themselves will take care that this " kind of men shall not escape, it being much more " their concern than it can be yours, to punish those " who refuse to worship them; whom you do but con-" firm in their opinions, while you oppress and accuse "them as atheifts, and object other crimes against them. "which you cannot prove. Nor can a more acceptable " fervice be done them; for being accused, they chuse to "die, rather than live, for that God whom they wor-" ship; by which means they become victorious. " for the earthquakes that have been, or yet do happen, " it may not be amiss to advertise you, whose minds are " ready to despond under any such accidents, to com-pare your case with theirs. They at such a time are " much more fecure and confident in their God; whereas " you feeming to neglect the Gods and their Rites, are " ignorant of that Deity which they worship; and "therefore envy and persecute to the death those who " worship him. Concerning these things several gover-" nours of provinces have heretofore writto my father, " of facred memory, to whom he returned this answer, "That these men should be no way molested, unless it ap-" peared that they attempted something against the Roman Empire. Yea, I my self have received many letters " con-^{*} Extat ad calcem Apolog. 2. Just. Martyris, operum pag. 100. edit. x686. in Folio, & apud Eusebium. Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 13. VOL. I.

"concerning them, to which I answered according to my father's opinion, which I propose to imitate. After all which, if any shall go on to create them trouble, merely occause they are such men (i. e. Christians) let him that is indicted of the crime be absolved, tho' it appear he be such a man, and let the informer undergo punishment.—Published at Ephesus in the place of the common assembly of Asia." This letter is calculated, from the year of the consuls, to have been fent in the year of our Lord 140 vulg. the third of the reign of Antoninus Pins. The Christians had some tranquillity for the rest of his reign. He died, as is commonly reckoned, on the 7th of March, of the year of our Lord 160.

To Antoninus Pius succeeded Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Philosophus, and his brother Lucius Verus. The writers of Marc Antoninus's Life speak great things of him, as a good man and a great philosopher, but withal zealous of heathen rites to the highest degree of superstition. He had from his youth been educated in the Salian College, all the offices whereof he had gone through *, affecting an imitation of Numa Pompilius the first master of religious ceremonies among the Romans, from whom he pretended to derive his original. What thoughts he had of the Christians, appears from this, that he ascribes their resolute undergoing of death to meer stubbornness and obstinacy +. He was then easily fet on by the priests and philosophers about him into a prejudice against Christianity, and persuaded to set on foot the fifth persecution against the Christians, whom he endeavoured to suppress by new laws and edicts, exposing them to all the malice of their enemies. The perfecution commenced in the eastern parts about the 7th year of his reign, and continued for feveral years; it spread into the West, especially France, where it raged with great severity. That the conflict was very sharp, may be guessed by the croud of Apologies presented to the Emperor by Justin Martyr, Melito.

^{*} Jul. Capitolinus in Antonino in vitis Cafarum, pag. m. 152. † ซัง ธัร ลักปังง. lib. 2. §. 3. pag. 106.

Melito, Athenagoras and Apollinaris. In Afia, Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna was among the first martyrs, twelve others from Philadelphia suffered with him.

The acts of Polycarp's martyrdom, recorded by Eufebius * are a most beautiful piece of antiquity, but too large to be here inferted. The fum of the whole is, "When his perfecutors came to his house, he was in bed: " tho' he might have faved himfelf by flipping to another "house, he refused, saying, The will of the Lord be done. He came down cheerfully, and ordered meat to " be fet before them; requesting for himself only one " hour for prayer, which being granted, he continued "two hours together with great affiltance of divine grace. " Prayer being ended, he was fet upon an afs, and car-" ried to Smyrna, and there received by Herod, an Ire-" narcha or Justice of the peace, into his chariot; who " defired him to fay, My Lord the Emperor, or to fa-" crifice. This he would not at any rate comply with; " therefore the angry judge thrust him out of his chariot " with fuch violence, as he hurt his leg in the fall. No-" thing daunted, he went chearfully to the place of exe-" cution; to which when he with the judge came, a " confused noise did arise, but a voice was heard by "many of our friends (fays my author) +, but no per"fon feen speaking, faying, Polycarp be strong, quit " thy felf like a man. The Proconful began to perfuade " him, Regard, said he, thy great age, swear by the genius " of Cæsar, say with us, take away the impious, swear, " blaspheme Christ, and I will release thee. To which " Polycarp answered, These sourscore and six years have I ferved him, and he never did me any harm; How shall I " blaspheme my Saviour?" (These years Spanhemius reckons # to have commenced from Polycarp's conversion to Christianity, he must then at his sufferings have been very old.) "The Proconful still importuned him to swear " by Cæsar's Genius. To whom he replied, fince you are so vainly ambitious, that I should swear by the ^{*} Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 15. Vide etiam de Polycarpi martyrio Eccl. Smyrnensis Epistolam, cum Ignatii Epistolis, editis Oxoniæ 1709, pog. 62, & seqq. + Ibid. + Historia Christiana in Folio, col. 665.

" Emperor's Genius, as you call it, as if you knew not " who I am, hear my confession, I am a Christian; if " you have a mind to learn the Christian Religion, ap-" point me a time, I'll instruct you. The Proconsul " advised him rather to instruct the people. He an-" fwered; to you I rather chuse to address my discourse; "for we are commanded by the laws of our religion, to give to Princes and the Powers ordained of God, " all the honour and reverence that's not contrary to the " precepts of Christianity. As for the common people, "I do not think fit to make any Apology to them.
"The Proconful then threatned him with wild beafts. " Call for them, fays the martyr, for we are determined or not to change from better to worse, counting it fit only to turn from vice to virtue. Then said the Proconsul, "I have a fire that shall tame thee. Thou threatenest me, faid Polycarp, with a fire that burns for an hour, " and is prefently extinct, but art ignorant of the fire " of eternal damnation, and the future judgment refer-" ved for the wicked in the world to come. But why " delayest thou? Bring forth whatever thou hast a " mind to. After this, and other words spoke by the " martyr with cheerful confidence and divine grace, the " Proconful caused the Crier to make proclamation, Po-" lycarp has confessed himself to be a Christian. At "which the Jews and Gentiles gave a shout, saying, "This is the great Doctor of Asia, and the father of the Christians; this is the destroyer of our Gods, that teaches men not to do facrifice, nor to worship these " Deities.

"Polycarp being then ordered to be burned alive, the Fews were particularly active to bring faggots and fewel to the fire. When the officer came to nail him to the stake, he defired them to forbear, assuring them, that he who gave him strength to endure the fire, would enable him without nailing to stand immoveable in the hottest slames. So they only tied him, he standing like a sheep ready for the slaughter, designed as an acceptable facrifice, poured out his soul in a pathetic prayer; which being done, the sire was Ch.3. Christians by M. Antoninus Philosophus. 341 " blown up. Behold a wonder, says our author*, feen by us who were present, that we might declare it to others. The slames disposing themselves into an arch " like the fails of a ship swelled with the wind, gently " encircled the body of the martyr, who flood all the " while, not like burning flesh, but like gold or filver " purified in the furnace, his body fending forth a de-" lightful smell like frankincense or some costly spices, to " our fenses. The infidels exasperated by the miracle, " commanded a spear-man to go near and run him "through with a fword, which he had no fooner done, " but fuch a quantity of blood iffued from the wound as " extinguished the fire. After this his body was burnt to " ashes, and the Christians gathered up his bones, and decently buried them." Thus died this Apostolical Man about the hundredth year of his age, in the year of our Lord 167. The amphitheatre where he suffered, fays a late traveller into these parts +, is yet in a great measure remaining: in the two opposite sides thereof, are the dens where the lions were wont to be kept.

In this Persecution many others received the crown of martyrdom. At Rome, Ptolemy and Lucius, Justin the martyr and his companions were first scourged, and then beheaded. In France, the letter writ by the churches of Lyons and Vien to those of Asia and Phrygia, preserved by Eusebius ||, informs us, "That it was impossible for "them exactly to describe the cruelty of their enemies," " and the feverity of those torments the martyrs suffered, " being banished from their houses, forbid to shew their "heads, reproached, beaten, hurried from place to " place, plundered, stoned, imprisoned, with all ex-" pressions of ungovernable rage and fury. But the " jufferings of this present life are not to be compared with " the glory that shall be revealed. Particularly Vettius " Epagathus, a man full of zeal and piety, who feeing " his Fellow-Christians unjustly dragged before the judg-" ment-feat, required leave of the prefident, that he * Euseb. lib. 4. cap. 15. Ecclesiæ Smyrnensis Epistola, ut supra

Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 1.

cap. 15. pag. 72.

Tho. Smith Epistola de septem Asiae Ecclesis, pag. 164.

342 The Persecution raised against the

"might plead his brethrens cause, and openly shew that they were not guilty of the least wickedness or impiety. But the court not daring to grant him so " reasonable a request, the judge took the advantage to " afk him, If be was a Christian? Which he publickly " owned, and fuffered martyrdom. Blandina, a lady " of fingular virtue, but of whom the Church doubted "how she would hold out to make a resolute confession, " by reason of the weakness of her sex, and tenderness " of her education, yet she did bear all with such invin-" cible magnanimity, that her tormentors, tho' they " took their turns from morning to night, and plied " her with all kind of racks and tortures, were yet forced " to give over, and confess themselves overcome; won-" dring that a body fo broken and mangled should yet " be able to draw its breath, and declared, that one of " these torments was sufficient to take away her life, " much more fo many and fo great. But her happy " foul gained strength by suffering, and mitigated all " the fense of her pain, by repeating these words, I " am a Christian. Biblis, tho' at first she fainted, yet " recovered her courage, and expired in the midst of most acute tortures. Bothinus Bishop of Lyons, an " infirm man above ninety years old, was beaten and to stoned to death. Santlus a Deacon of Vien, together 66 with Maturus, were exposed in the amphitheatre, tor-" mented and imprisoned several days together, pre-" fented to wild beafts, placed in an iron chair red-hot, " and at last run through with a spear. Attalus, a Ro-" man Citizen, difgracefully led up and down as in "triumph, and then beheaded; as was also Alexander the Physician, a Phrygian, who readily professed him-" felf a Christian; and Ponticus, a youth of fifteen " years of age, who through all methods of cruelty " and torment, which might have shaken a more mature " age, entred the kingdom of heaven." These and fome others, the circumstances of whose sufferings are more at large preserved by Euschius, in the place last cited, not only cheerfully endured all extremities themfelves, Ch.3. Christians by M. Antoninus Philosophus. 343 felves, but also encouraged and strengthned others boldly to contend for the faith.

At length the Emperor Marcus Antoninus seems to have relaxed the perfecution, upon this occasion. He being engaged in a war with the Quadi, a people inhabiting those parts of Germany called now Austria and Bavaria; his army was under great difficulties, being like to perish with thirst, under a warm sun and hot foil, where they could have no water. In this strait his officers told him, that there was in his army a legion of Christians called the Melytenian, and there was nothing but thefe Christians could obtain it, by prayer. The Emperor therefore defired, that they might call upon their God, which they did, " Falling down upon our knees, as is our custom, says Eusebius *, our enemies thought this " an unufual fight; but a more wonderful followed, for " it is faid, that fuddenly there came upon the enemies "thunder, with fire and lightning, which ruined and put them to flight. But a pleasant shower came upon "the Roman Army to refresh them, who were like to " perish for thirst, and were praying to God for it." The truth of this fact is avouched by Tertullian +, who lived near that time, and from him and Apollinarius, is recorded by Eusebius in his history ±, and in his Chronicon. The substance of the story is also owned by the heathen Historians, as Julius Capitolinus , Lampridius ++, and Xiphiline ++, who wrote the lives of the Roman Emperors about that time; tho' out of fpite to the Christians they ascribe it to Jupiter Pluvius, or to the Emperor's own prayers. Claudian also sings of it, as may be feen by his own words at the foot of the ZA page.

*Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 5.

[†] Apologeticus, cap. $\hat{\gamma}$. Marcus quoque\ Aurelius in Germanica Expeditione, Christianorum militum orationibus ad Deum satis, imbres in siti illa impetravit. Ad Scapulam ca . 4. operum pag. m. 92.

[#] Euseb loco citato.

[|] Chronicon ad Annum Dom. 178. Fol. 78.  Capitolinus in M. Antonino, pag. m. 158.

⁺⁺ Lampridius in Heliogabalo, pag. 198.

^{‡‡} Xiphilin. Epit. Dionis in Marco.

page *. Mr Addison, late Secretary of State, in his Travels through Italy, informs us +, That upon Antoninus's Pillar is to be feen at this day the figure of Jupiter Pluvius, fending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunder-bolts on his enemies; which is a very great confirmation of the story of the Thundring Legion κεοαυνοβο'λου, fo Eusebius calls it ‡, and a standing evidence of the truth, even some way greater than the testimony of an ancient author. The same honourable and learned person tells us, I have seen, says he, a medal, which relates to the same affair, where the Emperor is called Germanicus, and carries on the reverse a thunderbolt in his hand. The learned Hermannus Witsius has wrote a treatise to confirm the truth of the matter ||. What I have already advanced, may prove the truth of the fact to any unprejudiced person. We cannot expect that the Heathens will speak too plainly upon a subject that tends to commend Christianity. And I cannot see that a Christian who believes that Elijab prayed, and the heavens gave rain, and that God hears the prayers of his people, should doubt but that this God might fignally hear the prayers of a whole legion of Christians, when this might tend to his own glory, to the conviction of his enemies, and to the good of his Church. Upon this happy event the Emperor wrote to the Senate, acknowledging this great bleffing, and commanding all just fayour to be shewn to the Christians. That the Emperor wrote fuch letters is evident, fince Tertullian, who wrote but about thirty years after that time quotes them, and appeals to them, as in his words at the foot of the page,

* Claud.in sextum Cons. Honorii, ver. 340. & seqq. Clemens, Marce, redis-Laus ibi nulla ducum: nam flammeus imber in hostem Decidit: ---Tunc contenta polo mortalis nescia teli Pugna fuit----Addition's Travels, pag. 357, & feqq.

[#] Euseb. Hist loco citato.

^{||} Diatribe de legione fulminatrice.

page *, which he would never have done, if the fact had not been unquestionable, and known to the Romans at that time: and it appears by Eusebius +, that the good effects of this indulgence continued even to the time of the Emperor Commodus; tho' at the same time I strankly own, that the stress of the whole affair is not to be laid upon the Emperor Marc Antonine's Letters extant at this day, at the end of Justin Martyr's second Apology ‡, which tho' they should be interpolated, yet it appears from Tertullian and Eusebius, that this Emperor did give orders to the Senate, allowing the Christians to live, forbidding to accuse them; and that those who libelled them only for being Christians, should be punished by death, even to be burnt alive.

The Christians enjoyed a considerable time of tranquillity and peace under the reigns of the Emperors Commodus, Elius Pertinax and Julian, that is, for the space of about 15 years, from Anno Dom. vulg. 180 to 195, in which time the Christian Religion made great progrets. For, as Eusebius informs us ||, The dostrine of salvation did then prevail with all forts of men to worship the only true God: Even at Rome those who were of the first rank for riches and honours, with their whole samilies, joined themselves to the Church, to obtain salvation to their jouls.

In the year 195, Severus, an African, got into the throne. He was a Prince witty and learned, prudent and politic, hardy and valiant; tho' at the fame time crafty and fubtle, treacherous and unfaithful, bloody and passionate, as his own historian observes ; his nature truly answering his name, vere Pertinax, vere Severus, that is, truly obstinate and cruel. He put to death ^{*} Apologeticus, cap. 15. operum pag. 23. At nos edimus protectorem, si litera M. Aurelii Imperatoris gravissimi requirantur, quibus illam Germanicam sitim Christianorum sorte militum precationibus, impetrato imbri, discussamontestatur, qui sicut palam ab ejusmodi hominibus panam dimovit, ita alio modo palam dispersit, adjectu etiam accusatoribus damnatione & quidem tetriore.

⁺ Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 21.

[‡] Operum pag. 101, 102. Edit. Colon. 1686. Fol.

[|] Hist. lib. 5. cap. 21.

^{} Spartiani Severus, in vitis Cæsarum, pag. m. 184.

many of the Roman Senators. Under him began the fixth Persecution; for tho' at first he shewed himself savourable to the Christians, yet afterward he changed his mind, and gave ear to those who traduced them as an infamous generation, a people that designed nothing but rebellion and treason against the state. Whereupon he not only suffered his ministers and governours of provinces to treat them with all imaginable cruelty, but also he himself gave out edicts, forbidding any, under the most terrible penalties, to profess either the Jewish or Christian Religion, as is mentioned even by Startian a heathen *, which was executed with that rigour and inhumanity, that the Christians in those days verily believed that the time of Antichrist did then take place. The martyrs of note whom this perfecution fent to heaven, were Victor Bishop of Rome, Leonidas the father of Origen, beheaded at Alexandria +, Serenus, Heraclides, Heron, another. Serenus, Plutarchus, all Origen's scholars, and Rhais a Catechumen: She also, fays Origen +, received baptism by fire. Potamiana, an illustrious virgin, and her mother Marcella, after various torments were committed to the flames, and Bafilides one of the officers who led them to the execution. Irenaus Bishop of Lyons, being prepared by feveral torments, was at length put to death. Tis not easy to assign the certain date of his martyrdom, the record thereof being lost, but probably it was about the year of our Lord 202 ||, before Severus's expedition into Britain, when he took Lyons in his way, that he might fee the execution done with his own eyes. And indeed the vast numbers who are said to have suffered there, agree well enough with the fierce and cruel temper of that Prince, who had conceived a particular difpleasure against those citizens, and a worse against the Christians. Tho' many of these martyrs are unknown to us, yet their names are honourably writ in the lamb's book of life. Having

^{*} Spartiani Severus in vitis Calarum, pag.m. 184. Judaos fieri sub gravi pana vetnit, idem de Christianis sanxit.

[†] Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 1. ‡ Apud Euseb. in Hist. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 4. vide etiam cap. 5. Il Dr. Cave's Life of Ironaus, pag. 164.

Having thus given an account of the perfecutions the Christian Church endured by the heathen powers, in the first and second centuries, that which we have last named dipping a few years into the third; before I proceed to the rest of the perfecutions, I shall observe a few things relating to the Heathens that were uneasy to the Christians, beside what they endured by perfecuting Emperors.

The Governours of the provinces, who before the time of Constantine the Great were all Heathens, from an inveterate hatred to the Christian Name, did sometimes persecute before they received any new orders from the Emperor reigning, and without any new law, only of their own accord executing those which had been in sorce under the preceding Emperors. This seems to have been the case in the reign of Antoninus Pius. Oftentimes also the prefects and deputies stretched their orders to the utmost, and the enraged Pagan populace imputed all the calamities which came upon them as a just judgment for their sins, to the Christians, and therefore hurried them to most cruel deaths.

In the first century, about the time of the Emperor Domitian, there appeared a grand impostor, called Apollonius Tyanæus: he was born at Tyana, a city of Cappadocia, and died in the reign of the Emperor Cocceius Nerva. His life was writ by Philostratus in the third century 100 years and more after his Hero was dead. This book is still extant, and translated into feveral languages. Hierocles a heathen philosopher, in the reign of Diocletian, wrote against the Christians a book he called Philalethes; where, to render our religion ridiculous, he compares this Apollonius with our Lord Jefus Christ, afferting, that as the one did miracles, fo did the other; as the one afcended to heaven, fo did the other. Eulebius Bishop of Cæsarea solidly answered this book of Hierocles, where he shews that Apollonius is so far from deserving to be compared with Christ, that he ought not to be called a philosopher, nor a good man; and that Philostratus, who wrote the history of his life, is an author that deferves no credit,

credit, who contradicts himself at every turn, who doubts of the miracles which he himfelf reports, and tells many things which are manifest fables. Concerning this Apellonius and his Historian, I shall further remark, First, That Philostratus, when he writes the history of Apollonius Tyanæus, more than 100 years after he was dead, without any memoirs, helps or records, to vouch his narrative, deferves no credit. At best he could only have his relations from a fecond or third hand, there being no eye-witnesses that transmitted them to his time. As to Damis, the companion of Apollonius, he was a partner with him in the imposture, but wrote nothing that ever was heard of. The hiftory of the Gospel was writ by those who were eye-witnesses to Christ and his miracles, in the fame age wherein it was acted. But as to this Apollonius, not only Christian Writers, but even the very best Heathen authors and historians, who lived about that time, and long before Philostratus, as Tacitus, Sueton, Pliny, Plutarch, Dion Cassius, Celsus and others, are filent concerning him. This flory advanced by Philostratus appears then as a fable concerning things which no body heard or faw but himfelf. 2 dly, The great motive that feems to have induced Philosiratus to write this idle flory, wasto compliment Caracalla and Julia, who were so fond of sophists and magicians, that their court was full of them. 3dly, That whole book of Philostratus is full of ridiculous fables, even in matters of fact, which no wife man ever believed; as, That the river Euphrates runs a great way under ground, and appears again in Egypt, where 'tis joined with the river Nilus *: That in India there are women black like Æthiopians in the upper part of their body, from the head to the breast, and all the rest of their body white +: That in India they have a black hog shead full of water, and another full of wind; when they want rain, they open the one, and the clouds pour down rain; and when they want wind, they open the other, and the wind blows, and drives away the rain ‡. The Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 3.

^{*} Philostratus de vita Apollonii Tyanzi, lib. 1. cap. 11. † Philostratus de vita Apollonii Tyanzi, lib. 3. cap. 1.

may

whole story he tells of the Brachmans and Indians sinells rank of the fable. Who can believe that Apollonius understood the talk of birds, and foretold many things by it? and also by the intrails of a lion*? He frequently afferts the Metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into beasts, of which therefore he would not eat. Who can credit that he understood all languages? That he taught himself all his extraordinary knowledge? That he knew the thoughts of the heart? That he foretold things to come? That he loofed his own chains? That he cast out devils, drove away the pestilence when it was raging at Ephesus, healed the fick, raised the dead, and a great many of the like things, which Philostratus ascribes to him? The very errors of that book in history and geography, may amuse children who are not acquainted with these matters, but will never fatisfy a man of fense and learning, but rather convince him that the author was a cheat. In short, Apollonius was an impostor, whom the Heathens trumped up to rival the glory of Christ and his Apostles; or at best, he was a cunning magician and necromancer. Philostratus owns he was accounted fo by the Magicians at Babylon +, and by the Indian Brachmans, and Gymnosophists in Egypt; that he was incarcerated for magic by Domitian; that he studied with the magicians at Babylon #, and acknowledged the Brachmans in India as his mafters |; and that he facrificed to the heathen deities, to the fun, and to Jugiter. Lucian in his Pseudomantis tells of one Alexander, who knew the tricks of Apollonius Tyanaus, and his whole tragedy. But I think we have enough of him. 'Tis a token that the heathens and infidels in these times durst not deny the truth of the miracles done by our Redeemer and his Apostles, the light of them being writ as with fun-beams, and fo glaring, that every one might be convinced by it; but through the cunning of the enemy of mankind, they counterfeit an imposture to deceive the simple. He that desires to know more of him may confult Eusebius against Hierocles, Huetius*, and Spanbenius †; and after all I humbly conceive the very reading of Philostratus's life of Apolionius, may convince any wife man of the imposture.

^{*} Ibid. lib. 1. cap. 13.

⁺ Philostratus ut supra, lib. 1. cap. 1, 2.

Besides this counterfeit, who by some sew authors that name him, is faid to have acted his tricks through the world, from the reign of Nero to that of Nerva, (i.e. near 50 years, tho' the facts are not well attested, as is already faid) there were in these times some eminent Heathen Philosophers, who did all the prejudice they could to Christianity; and therefore I shall notice some of them who were more remarkable: as Peregrinus a Cynic, or, as Lucian || calls him, a Stoic Philosopher. He flourish'd in the time of the Emperor Trajan, and died in that of Marcus Aurelius, or Commodus. Aulus Gellius fays ‡, he was furnamed Proteus, that is, changeable, and with the fame breath calls him, Virum constantem & gravem, a grave and constant man. 'Tis not easy to reconcile these characters: perhaps Gellius thought the furname of Proteus unjustly given to his friend. Lucian fays, that Peregrinus once professed himself a Christian, and was cast into prison, where he had large collections given him by charitable people; but he eafily made his escape, and returned to his own city Parium on the Hellespont: Being ejected by the Church, he abandon'd the profession of Christianity, and returned to Paganism. He went out from us, but he was not of us. At the Olympic Games he, in view of all Greece, cast himself into a pile of fire he had made, where he died, and fome body gave a talent for the staff he laid aside when he destroyed himself. Athenagoras  and Tertullian ++ speak of his death, all agreeing concerning it, and Ammianus Marcellinus || who calls him a famous Philosopher.

Crescens,

^{*} Demonst. Evang. Prop. 9. cap. 147. in Fol. pag. 650, ——655. † Hist. Christiana, §. 1. col. 593,594. || De morte Peregrini, operum Tom. 2. pag. 558, & seqq. ‡ Noctes Atticæ, lib. 12. cap. 11.  Legat. †† Exhor. ad Martyras, oper. pag. 137.

^{||} Lib. 29. pag. m. 646.

Crescens, a Cynic Pnilosopher, was a declared enemy to our religion; he was a man of an impure life, and a great promoter of the Persecutions against the Christians, in the reigns of Antoninus and M. Aurelius. Tatian the Affyrian says of him *, Crescens who dwelt at Megalopolis, did exceed all men παιδεραστία, in the infamous love of boys, and was most covetous of money. He perfuaded others to contemn death, and yet thought it an evil thing himself; and therefore would have me and Justin put to death, as the greatest evil be could do us, because he (that is, Justin) in preaching the truth had accused the philosophers as voluptuous impostors. Justin Martyr had many debates with this man, and he fays of him +, I expect that by some of these nominal pretenders to wisdom I shall be ensured, taken and affixed to the Cross, even by Crescens φιλοσόφου χαι φιλοχόμπου, that vain-glorious philosopher; but I cannot call such a man worthy of the name of a philosopher, who speaks publickly of those things he understands not, who calls the Christians Atheists, and ungodly men, to ingratiate bimself with those whom he has led into error. Crescens had spoke so much unjustly to the prejudice of the Christians, that Justin Martyr found himself obliged to wipe off these calumnies and vindicate them in his second apology; and this vain-glorious philosopher was never at rest, till Justin had obtain'd a crown of martyrdom. Eusebius repeats these passages || concerning Crescens, and speaks of him to the same purpose.

Lucian of Samosata was another declared enemy to the Christians. I have frequently in this work had occasion to cite this author; he was an Epicurean, if we believe Suidas, but Lucian himself in his Pscudomantis says $\ddot$, that he came out of the school of Apollonius Tyanaus, where he learned his tricks, and even the love of Boys, or Sodomy. Some authors place him in the time of Trajan, others, as Spanbeim ||||, in the time of the Emperors Aurelius and Commodus. He mocks at Heathenism, as in his Philosoppeudes, at Christianity in his discourse de morte Peregrini, and in a manner derides all religion, and sets up for an Atheist in his Juster Tragædus*. And yet amidst all his satyrs against the Christians, he has some grains of truth. These wretches, says he folieve themselves immortal, that they shall live for ever; and therefore despise death, and yield themselves to it. Their Lawgiver persuaded them that they are all brethren; and therefore when they depart from us, and deny the deities of the Greeks, and worship their crucified teacher, and frame their lives conformable to his laws, they contemn riches, have all things common, and keep their faith; and when any cunning man joins them, he soon grows rich.—

^{*} Orat. contra Græcos, pag. 157. † Apologia 1. operum pag. 46,47. | Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 16. † Operum Luciani, Tom. 1. pag. 746. | Hist. Christiana, col. 69

352 Of Celsus, and several Heathen Authors.

To this day they worship that great man μεγαν ἀνθεωπον crucified in Palestine. Peregrinus learned that wonderful wishom of the Christians. Suidas says, Lucian was torn in pieces by dogs. If it be so, it was a just judgment against him, who, as a black-mouth'd cur, barked at all religion.

Celsus the Esticurean was another great enemy to Christianity. He lived a little before Origen, or was for some time his con-temporary; for he flourished under Hadrian Lucian dedicates his Pseudomantis to him. He was well instructed in all kind of learning, which he made a bad use of to oppose the Scriptures, and the Christian Religion, in his book he called 'Annθηλόρον, which is now lost, except so much of it as is repeated by Origen, who gave a solid answer to it in eight books, which not only refute Celsus, but may also answer the objections of Libertines and Deists against the holy Scriptures to this very day.

It feems not far out of our road also to observe that in the second century were many learned men, and eminent writers among the Heathens, as Frontinus, who then wrote his Stratagemata; Cornelius Tacitus, a Prætor and Consul, who wrote his annals and history, a good part whereof yet remains; Pliny the younger, a consul,

^{*} Tom. 2. pag. 127. + De Morte Peregrini, operum Tom. 2. pag. 565, 567. | Origen contra Celsum, lib. 1. cap. 8.

his Epistles and Panegyric are yet among our hands; Plutarch, commonly esteemed Trajan's Præceptor, his Lives and Morels are yet extant, and are books very useful in their own kind. Under the Emperor Hadrian, Phlegon a mathematician wrote on the Olympiads fixteen books, which are now loft. He recorded the darkness at Christ's Crucifixion, of which formerly. Favorinus a Sophist. Etistatus, a Stoic Philosopher, wrote his Enchiridion or Moral Precepts. Arrianus an admirer of Epistelus, an historian, of whom we have remaining feven books of Alexander the Great's expedition, and the Periblus of the Euwin and Red-sea. Philo Biblius is mentioned by Eusebius, and is faid to have translated Sanchoniathon's Phanician history; of which we had occasion to discourse more fully in the first and second chapters of this book. Only here I remark, that if Sanchoniathon wrote fuch a history, 'tis strange that Justin Martyr, Theopbilus Antiochemus, Tatian, Athenagoras, Clemens of Alexandria, nor Tertullian, all very learned and inquisitive men, who lived and wrote about that time, when Philo Biblius is faid to have translated him, speak never one word of him. About the same time flourished Florus, who wrote a compend of the Roman history, and C. Sueionius Tranquillus, whose Lives of the twelve Cæsars yet remains. Under Antoninus Pius, flourished Galen, a famous Physician; Justin, who compendized Trogus Pomfeius; Aprianus, an eminent Historian, but most of his books are now loft; and Diogenes Laertius, whose ten books of the Lives of Philosophers yet remain. Under M. Antoninus and Lucius Verus flourished Claudius Ptolemaus, famous for his Aftronomy and Geography; Sextus Empiricus, of the sect of the Pyrronists; Numenius, a Plaionic, who called Plate, Moses atticizing or speaking Greek; Atuleius, accused of magic; Pausanias, who wrote ten books of the antiquities of Greece; and Aulus Gellus, the author of Notles Attica. Finally, under Comone lus flourithed Julius Pollun, who wrote the Onomasticon; and Athenaus, who wrote 15 books of Deipnosophists. Befides many famous Roman lawyers, which I do not infift upon. We have fometimes in this work remarked a few Vol. I. Aa paffages passages from these authors concerning the Christians. But 'tis no wonder that these Heathens speak so little of them, since these were men full of self-conceit, despissing others who were not of their opinion, and especially the Christians whom they mortally hated.

354 Of feveral Roman Emperors.

To return to the Propagation of Christianity and State of the Church under the Heathen Emperors: Septimius Severus, the author of the fixth Perfecution, having died in Britain, his fon Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Bassianus Caracalla succeeded in the Empire in the year of our Lord 211. He was a cruel prince; he killed his own brother Geta, and after his death confecrated him as a Deity, faying, Sit divus, dum non sit vivus, Let him be a Saint, fince he is not alive *. He married his father's widow Julia; he confulted with none but magicians and astrologers. He put to death Papinianus the lawyer, because he would not defend his parricide, and also his brother's fervants, and many other illustrious persons at Rome. He filled the town of Alexandria with the blood of its inhabitants, and was void of humanity to his fubjects, and fidelity to his allies. So many cruelties haftned his death; his own officers conspired against him, and a captain called Martian killed him by the order of Macrinus, after he had reigned fix years, two months, and' two days.

Marcus Opilius Severus Macrinus was faluted Emperor in the year of our Lord 217; he was of a mean birth, and fortune raifed him by degrees. He made his fon Diadumenus, aged not above nine or ten years, partaker of the Empire. His cruelty made him odious to his foldiers, and therefore the fame who fet him upon the throne pulled him down by a violent death, after he had reigned and therefore the fame who fet him upon the reigned one year two months.

Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Heliogabalus, fo called because he was Priest of the Sun before his election: He was son to Caracalla and Semiamira, and chosen Emperor by the army in the room of Macrinus. He carried his own God with him to Rome, forbidding the worship of any other. He built him a temple, and continued priest himself, commanding the vestal fire, the Palladium and confecrated bucklers to be carried thither. He said the religion of the Jews and Samaritans, and the devotion of the Christians, ought also to be brought there, that the secret priestbood of Heliogabalus might maintain all kind of worthip *. He was a Prince fo abominably vicious, that he was called the Roman Sardanafalus. His luxury was boundless. When near the fea, he would eat nothing but fowls from the remotest mountains; and when farthest from the sea, would eat nothing but sea-fish. He fed his lamps with balfam, and filled his fish-ponds with fweet-scented water. He was lavish of his treasure. He was a monster for all kinds of debauchery; as may be feen in Lampridius, and others who from him have written his life. He having defigned to cut off Alexander the fon of Mammea, whom the fenate had declared Cæfar, and being hateful even to his own guard, he and his mother were both flain in the camp, and their corps, after a thousand indignities, thrown into the Tiber, after a reign of three years, nine months and four days. These three Emperors last named, tho' very vicious Princes, so as Lampridius, a Heathen, calls them †Judgments against the Romans, yet none of them were tainted with persecuting the Christians.

After Heliegabalus's death, Alexander Severus was declared Emperor, in the year of our Lord 222. He governed 13 years: he was a calm, wife, mild and learned Prince, one of the best of the Heathen Emperors. He acted much by the advice of his mother Mammea, and they were both treacherously murdered at the same time, by the order of Maximinus his successor. His historian, Elius Lampridius, has the following passages that concern our Religion, and seem to deserve room here. He says $\|\|\), This Emperor in his private chappel [Larario,] A a 2 to which he reforted almost every morning for his devotion, bad the images of some deified princes and boly persons, and among them Apollonius; and, as a writer of these times fays, Christ, Abraham, Orpheus, and these sort of Gods. A strange mixture! He reserved to the Jews their privileg s, and permitted the Coristians to live qui tly. He went up to the capital every seventh day when he was in town, and frequented the temples. He defired a temple should be built to Christ, and that he should be received among the Gods, which Hadrian is faid to have defigned, who ordered temples to be built in all cities without images; and therefore those temples where there are no Gods, are to this day called Hadrian's, being such as he ordered. But he was forbid to do this by those who consulted the sacred books, who found, that if that happened to be done, all men would become Christians. — He made a publick edits, when he was to appoint governors of provinces, exhorting the people, if they had any crime to accuse them of, they might prove the same under pain of death: For he said it was reasonable, that when the Christians and Jews did this in their preaching priests, who were to be ordained, that as great care should be had in electing governours of provinces, who had the trust of men's lives and estates. When the Christians had possessed themselves of a public place, which the cooks or victuallers claimed as belonging to them, the Emperor gave this opinion, That it was better God should be worshipped there at any rate, than that it should be given to the cooks. He used oft these words, which be bad beard from the Jews or Christians, Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; which he caused to be proclaimed by a crier, and was so much in love with it, that he would have it infcribed on his public buildings. From what we have advanced concerning this Emperor, it feems probable that Christianity had made fuch progress over the world at that time, the precepts thereof were counted fo excellent, and the conversation of its professors so pure and unblameable, that this virtuous and learned Prince had drunk in fome of its principles, and had a favourable opinion of our religion; tho' he was not to far engaged Chap.3. Seventh Perfecution by Maximinus. 357 as to become a Christian, nor to renounce the practice of Pagan Idolatry.

^{*} Lampridius in Heliogabalo, pag. m. 197.

[†] In Heliogabalo, non longe ab initio.

Lampridii Alexander Severus passim, mihi a pag. 222,000 ad 229.

The Church had now enjoyed a confiderable time of peace, for the space of 27 years, or thereabouts, after the death of Septimius Severus. The next who created disturbance to the Christians was Maximinus, a man of base and obscure original, of a mean and fordid education. He had been first a shepherd, then a high-wayman, and last of all a foldier. He was of strength and stature beyond the ordinary fize, and his manners as robust and boisterous as his conflication, every way suitable to the rudeness of his education. Never did a more cruel heast, says his historian *, tread upon the earth, resying altogether upon his strength, and upon that account reckoning himself almost immortal, he spared none, but especially killed all that knew any thing of his mean descent, that none might reproach him with the obscurity of his birth. Without judging, accufation, information or defence, be killed every body and seifed their goods, having put to death 4000 tersons; yet his cruelty could not be satisfied. He having flain his mafter Alexander Severus, that excellent Prince, of whom we have just now discoursed, usurped the government, and managed it fuitably to his cruelty.

The feventh perfecution was raifed by him. Indeed Sulpitius Severus 7 admits not this into the number, and therefore makes no more but nine heathen persecutions. Yet he fays, Maximinus vexed the clergy belonging unto the Churches. But Eufebius expresly affirms, "That " Maximinus stirred up a perfecution against the Chri-66 stians +, and that out of hatred to Alexander his Pre-" decefior, in whose family many believers found enter-" tainment; and commanded the prefidents of the " Churches, as the principal authors of the evangelical " doctrine, to be put to death." This persecution is placed A.D. 237. Firmilian Bishop of Cappadocia, in his letter to Gyprian, fays, " It was not a general but a 66 local perfecution, that raged in fome particular Aa 3 " places ^{*} Julius Capitolinus in Maximinis, pag. m. 236.

⁺ Sacra Historia lib. 2. + Hist. Eccl, lib. 6. cap. 28.

" places *, and especially in that province where he li-"ved, Serenianus the Roman President driving the " Christians out of all these countries." He adds, "That many dreadful earthquakes happening in these of parts, whereby towns and cities were fwallowed up, " gave new life and vigour to the perfecution; it being 66 usual with the Gentiles, if a famine, pestilence, earth-" quake, or inundation happened, to charge all upon 66 the Christians, and to fall foul on them." Pontian Bishop of Rome (being before banished to Sardinia) and Anteres his fuccessor, did at that time both suffer martyrdom †. Ambrefius, who was converted by Origen from the errors of Valentinus, and Marcion, a rich man, and also of great parts and learning, was then a noble confessor ‡. Origen wrote his book de martyrio, for the comfort of those who suffered in this evil time. But this being loft, the names of most of those who then suffered are buried in oblivion.

After Maximinus reigned Ballinus and Pupienus: to them fucceeded the Gordians, and to them Philippus Arabs, at which time, for about 12 years space, the Church enjoyed some mixture of calmness and tranquillity. Eusebius fays ||, 'Tis reported, we katexil no foc, that Philip was a Christian; and form, in the translation he has made of Eufebius's Chronicen, fays more politively , That Philip was the first of all the Roman Emperors who became a Christian. And after him a whole troop of historians and chronologers have afferted the same. The learned Spanhemius has at great length and with great learning examined this point both in his ecclefiaftic hiftory ††, and in a separate differtation #, and has found, that this Philip was no Christian. That which satisfies me to go into his opinion, is, that the heathen historians are filent about this Emperor's embracing our religion; that the ecclefiaftic historians all declare, That Constan-

^{*} Spannemii F.F. Hist. Christiana, col. 761.

[†] Inter Epistolas Cypriani, No. 75. ‡ Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 18, 19.

[#] Ad Annum Dom. 247. # Szc, 3.col.699, & fegq. # Operum Tom. 2.col. 405, ad 436.

tine the Great was the first Christian Emperor; that Philip was not like the primitive Christians in his morals : he was an Arabian robber, when he was made captain of the Prætorian bands, who then made and cut off Emperors as they pleased. He most treacherously and barbarously assassing the younger, a hopeful Prince, as all the Roman Historians declare, and usurped the empire *, and did not act becoming a Chriftian in his reign. Returning from the Persian War, he celebrated the great fecular games, in the thousandth year after Rome was built, with all the impiety, obscenity and vanity which any Heathen ever used: which practices Christians in these times perfectly abhorred \dagger . $\hat{S}_{panbeim}$ also produces coins and medals struck by Philip's order, which a Christian Prince would never have allowed, fince they bear all the marks of idolatry. Those who are curious, may fee more fully what that learned author has wrote on that subject. Mean time I leave Philip, and proceed to Decius. He having mounted the imperial throne, proved a good commander of an army and a prudent governour, but an implacable enemy to the Christians, against whom he raised the eighth Persecution, Anno Dom. 250, which proved, tho' among the shortest, (for it continued not two years) yet the hottest of any that had hitherto oppressed the Church. This may be ascribed to the Emperor's zeal for declining Heathenism, which he saw satally undermined by Christianity, and that there was no support for the one, but by the ruin of the other. Decius reigned scarce two years, being pursued by the Goths, who ravaged the provinces of Mcsis and Thracia; he drowned himself in a marsh, where his body was never found ‡. During his time the storm was very black and violent, no place remained but what did feel the dreadful effects thereof. The Christians were every where driven from their houses, spoiled of their estates, and tormented in their bodies. Whips and prisons, fire and wild beasts, scalding pitch and melted wax, sharp stakes and burning pincers, were but some of the methods of their treatment. When the old ones were run over, new were daily contrived. The laws of nature and humanity were brokendown, friend betrayed friend, and the nearest relation, his own father and brother. Every one was ambitious to promote the imperial edicts, and thought it meritorious to bring a Christian to the stake. Alexander Bishop of Jerusalem, an aged venerable man, who had governed his Church many years, was carried to Casarea, and after a bold confession of his faith, was cast into prison, where he died *. Babylas Bishop of Anticch, also died in prison.

^{*} Eutrop. lib. 9. Aur. Victor in Philippo. Jul. Capitolinus Gordiani tres, pag. m. 250. Philippus impiè non jure obtinuit imperium.

[†] Tertul.de Spectaculis, de Idoloiaria. ‡ Aur. Victoris Epitonie in Deci o.

Dionyfius of Alexandria fays +, " That there they fell upon a Presbyter, called Metra, whom they would have forced to blaspheme Christ. When he refused to do " it, they laid upon him with staves and clubs; with " fharp reeds pricked his face and eyes, and then stoned "him to death. They apprehended a holywoman, cal-" led Quinta, and endeavoured to compel her to worship in an idol-temple; which she refusing, the persecu-"tors bound her feet, and dragged her through the freet on hard ftones, whipt her, dashed her against mill-stones, and stoned her to death. The enraged mob broke into the Christians houses, plundered their co goods, and burnt them in the market-place. The " faints took joyfully this spoiling, knowing that in hea-" ven they had a more enduring fubstance. Neither se know I any fave one, fays be, of all they feifed, to "this very day, who denied our Lord. They took an " ancient virgin called Apollonia, whom they brought " forth, and dashing all the teeth out of her head, they ge made a great fire, threatning to cast her into it, un-" lefs fhe would fpeak fuch blatphemous words as they 66 bade her. She, after a little paufe, leaps into the fire, and was burned. Then they apprehended Seration ^{*} Euseb.Hist. Eccl. lib.6. cap. 39.

[}] Apud eund. lib. 6. cap. 41.

" in his house, whom they treated with the most bitter " torments, broke all the joints of his body, and "throwing him from a high loft killed him. The poor 66 Christians could no where shelter themselves, nor rest "day nor night, the multitudes crying out, That un-" less they would blaspheme Christ, they should all be burn-" ed. But sedition and intestine war troubled our per-" fecutors, and we got a little breathing. Soon after " came out cruel edicts, which made fome stagger. Others more strong in the faith valiantly endured perfe-" cution, and obtained martyrdom: As Julian, a man "difeased with the gout, and not able to stand, and "Cronion, who were laid upon Camels, scourged, and " at last thrown into the fire, where with great constancy " they fuffered death in the view of the multitude. "Julian went to his martyrdom, a foldier standing by " checked those who abused the sufferer with reproach-"ful words; whereupon a cry being raifed against him, he is presently apprehended, and being found a stedsast " foldier of Christ, was beheaded." It might detain us too long to give the detail of the fufferings of the rest who were crowned with martyrdom; as, Epimachus, Alexander, Ammon, Zeno, Ptolemy, Ammonaria, Mercuria, Istodore, and Dioscorus, a boy of fifteen years of age, and many others who willingly declared themselves to be Christians before the heathen tribunals, and that they were ready to feal their testimony with their blood; which frighted the judges, and made the cause of Christ to triumph, as is mentioned by the same Dionysius *.

Among others Isebyren, a servant to a nobleman, was commanded by his master to sacrifice to idols; which when he resused, and would by no means be persuaded to do, his master run him through with a pike †. At the same time Fabian Bishop of Rome, and many at Carthage, Ephesus, and other places, overcame by the blood of the lamb, and by the word of their testimony, and loved not their lives to the death. Nicephorus affirms, 'Tis easier to count the sands of the shore, than to reckon up all the martyrs martyrs who suffered in that persecution ||. Besides a great number of confessors, who were beaten, imprisoned, tormented, and many more who betook themselves to a voluntary exile, chusing rather to commit themselves to barren rocks and mountains, or to the mercy of wild beafts, than to fuch perfecutors who had put off all reafon and humanity. Among them was Paul of Thebais, a youth of fifteen years of age, who withdrew himself into the Egyptian Defarts, where finding a large and convenient cavern in a rock, which formerly had been a private mint-house in the time of Antony and Cleopatra, he took up his residence there, and led a solitary and anchoretic life, and became father of the hermits. In this religious retirement he continued till he was above one hundred years of age. In the last period of his life he was visited by Antonius, who had spent the greatest part of ninety years in these desarts, and performed the last office to Paul, by committing his dead body to the grave. Of these ancient hermits abundance of authors may be feen, as at the foot of the page *.

^{*} Loco citato.

Gallus fucceeded Decius, as in his government, fo in his enmity to the Christians, carrying on what the other had begun. But the cloud foon blew over: he made an ignominious peace with the Scytbians or Got s, that the Romans should pay an annual tribute to these Barbarians, which was never heard of before; and therefore his own army turned him off, and put him and his fon to death +. By some authors, he is not numbred in the series of the Roman Emperors. He was fucceeded by Valerian, who entred upon the empire with universal applause. In the beginning of his reign he was a patron to the Christians; he treated them with all offices of kindness and humanity, entertaining them in his own family, so as his court seemed a little Church for piety, a fanctuary Nicephori Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 29.

* Sozomen Hist. lib. 1. cap. 13. Russin. Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 8.

Athanasius in vita Ant. Hieronymi, Catalogus in Antonio. Polydor. Virgil, de inventoribus, lib. 7. cap. 1. Spanhem. Hist. Christiana, col, + Pomponii Læti Gallus. 802.

fanctuary and refuge for good men *. But alas! this pleafant feene foon evanished, the Emperor was seduced by a magician of Egypt called Macrinus, who persuaded him, That the only way to prosper in his affairs, was to restore the Gentile Rites, and to suppress Christianity, so bateful to the Gods. He then commenced the Ninth Perfecution, which began about the 257th year after our Lord's Birth, and continued three years and a half. Amouth was given him to speak blasphemies, and he had power forty and two months +. Dion fins Bishop of Alexandria, from whom Eusebius takes this, was himself banished to Cephro, a barbarous tract of the Libyan defart, and probably continued there till the perfecution was over. He fays ‡, 'Tis not necessary to reckon up the Christians particularly who suffered at this time, since they were many, and unknown to me: only this you may know, that both men and women, young and old, foldiers and country people, persons of all ranks and ages, were some of them scourged and whipt, others beheaded: others overcoming the violence of the flames, received a crown of martyrdom. To this very day the Præses does not cease to kill some, to expose others to torments, and weary others with frisons and chains, ordering that no person see them; and if any enquire for them, that fuch be apprehended. But God comforts his afflicted, by the cheerful care and diligence of the brethren. Cyprian elegantly and very pathetically bewails the hardships and fufferings which the martyrs did then undergo, in his letter to Nemesian and the rest that were condemned to the mines; nor did he himself escape, being beheaded at Carthage ||, as Xiftus and Quartus had been before him; and the three hundred martyrs, de massa candida, who rather than do facrifice to the heathen idols, leapt into a mighty pit of burning lime kindled for that purpose, and were stifled in the flames. In Spain suffered Fru Etnosus, Bishop of Terragon, with his two Deacons; at Rome, Xistus the Bishop, and St. Laurence the Deacon ; at Cæfarea, Prifeus, Malchus and Alexander ++, who ashamed to think they lay idle, while many others were contending for the crown, with one consent went to the judge, and consessed themselves to be Christians, and were cast to the wild beasts to be devoured; as also a woman in that city, who is said to have been tainted with the heresy of Marcion.

^{*} Euseb. Hist. Eccl lib. 7. cap. 9. † Ibid. ‡ Ibid. cap. 15. || Vide vitam Cypriani per Pontium Diaconum, præmissam Cypriani operibus.  Cyprian, Epitt. 82. †† Euseb. Hist. lib. 7. cap. 12.

Divine Providence, which fometimes in this world pleads the cause of oppressed innocence, did punish this Emperor for his horrible cruelty to those whose interest with heaven, while he was favourable to them, fecured his prosperity; for not only the northern nations did break in upon the empire, but Valerian himself was taken prisoner by Sapor King of Persia, who treated him below the rate of the meanest slave, even used him as his footftool to mount on horse-back *; and after some years captivity caused him to be flayed alive, and rubbed with falt; and so put a period to his miserable life. His fon Galienus growing wifer, by the miscarriages of his father, ftopt the perfecution, and restored peace and serenity to the Church, as appears by his edict recorded by Eusebius †. Notwithstanding all this severity, the number of converts multiplied fo prodigiously, that more than one half of the vast Roman Empire was by this time become Christian.

Under the reigns of the Emperors Claudius, Tacitus, Florianus, Probus, Carus and Numerian, the Christians enjoyed a long time of peace and prosperity. If we reckon this from the captivity of Valerian, in the year of our Lord 260, to the beginning of the Tenth Persecution, which I conceive may be placed in the year 302, any body may see that this tranquillity continued near 42 years. Indeed if we look thorough the ten heathenish persecutions from first to last, we may observe, that there were such lucid intervals betwixt them, as gave the Church not only a sweet-breathing time, but also a happy occasion to propagate Christianity over the world. Nor were these persecutions, except the Tenth, which we are afterward to discourse of, so lasting, nor so universal, as the Church did run the hazard of being ruined by them: yea the courage, constancy and patience of martyrs, with the holy lives and zeasous endeavours of the primitive Christians to promote the kingdom of Christ, did very much tend to advance the glory of our Redeemer and the good of the Church, in spite of all the persecutions which the enemy of mankind raised against it. The tranquillity which Christians enjoyed after the captivity of Valerian, had somewhat corrupted their manners, and therefore God was pleased to permit a Tenth Persecution to purge and winnow away their rubbish and chass.

^{*} Eutropius & Aurel. Victor, in Valeriano. Lactantius de mortibus persecutorum, pag. m. 66. Trebellius Pollio in Valeriano. † Hist. Eccl. hb. 7. cap. 13.

tion to purge and winnow away their rubbish and chaff. This did not commence with the beginning of Diocletian's reign: he was declared Emperor Anno Dom. 284. and affumed Maximinus Herculeus for his Collegue, in 286. These two governed the empire for some years; but finding themselves straitned on all hands, by the revolt of their subjects, they made two Cafars, Constantius Chlorus, father to Constantine the Great, and Galerius Maximianus. About this time Eusebius informs us *, "That the Emperors were fo favourable to the Chri-" stians, as they made them deputies and governours " over whole nations; that they lived in honour at the " emperor's court; that they made public profession of "their religion; that great numbers of the Heathens embraced Christianity; that there were Churches in " all cities; that the affemblies of the Christians were " fo numerous, that they were forced to pull down the " old, and build new and more spacious houses for pub-" lic worship; that Dorotheus and Gorgonius, and others " who preached the word, were had in honour; that " the Bishops were loved and esteemed by the officers and " governours of the provinces; the Emperors them-" felves shewed affection to the Christians; the wives, " children and fervants of the Emperors were Chri-" stians, and the greatest part of the subjects of the em-" pire had abandoned the worship of false Gods to em-" brace Christianity. This prosperity did daily increase,

^{*} Hist. Eccl. lib. 8. cap. 1.

366 Of the Tenth Persecution. " and could not be hindred by the arts of the devil or " wicked men, as long as the right hand of the Lord "did protect his people. But alas! fays he, our affairs, by too great foftness and liberty, did degenerate; one hating and reproaching another; Bishops con-" tending with Bishops; the people running into fac-"tions, hypocrify, diffimulation and wickedness did " prevail.—Hence, as the prophet Jeremiab speaks, " How bath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with " a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven to earth " the beauty of Ifrael? And as the Pfulmist observes, "Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou baft profaned his crown, by casting it down to the ground; " thou hast broke down all his hedges: all that pass by the " way spoil him; he is a reproach to his neighbours. Thou " halt fet up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast " made all his enemies to rejoice, &c."

The learned M. Du Pin remarks*, "That the picture which Eulebius draws of the state of the Church, " (viz. that just now related) during the first eighteen " years of the reign of Diccletion, 'tis thought, rather " represents the East than the West, because the mar-"tyrologies make mention of many martyrs in Gaul, " who could not have fuffered after the perfecution was " declared, fince Gaul being under the dominion of Con-"Tisfaid, "that Maximianus coming to Gaul, in the year 286, " put to death a whole legion, that was wholly made "up of Christians. 'Tis said, that he immediately sent Ristius Varus, famous in the martyrologies under the " name of Ristiovarus, who condemned to death an incredible number of Christians in Gaul. We likewise " find, that the famous St. Sebafian suffered martyrdom at Rome in 285 or 286, and fome other martyrs were put to death in that city before the perfecution " was declared." These things are looked upon as uncertain or fabulous even by M. Du Pin; and I may add, that the Roman Martyrologies are no fufficient vouchers, fince they advance many legendary ftories concerning the martyrs, without fufficient foundation in antiquity, and which therefore deferve no credit, as we have formerly observed, when speaking of the First Persecution by Nero *.

* Abridgment of Church-Hiftory, Vol. 2. pag. 78.

This might lead me to make fome further enquiry into the story of the Thebæan Legion; it is at large narrated by Eucherius Lugdunensis +, and from him by Dr. Cave ‡. The sum of the whole is, Maximianus Cæsar being sent into Gaul to repress a rebellion, there he had added to his army a band of Christians called the Thebean Legion, confisting of 6666 resolute soldiers. Coming to Octodurus in Savoy, Maximianus commands his army to come together, and under a great penalty, to fwear by the altars of the Gods, That they would unanimously fight against their enemies, and persecute the Christians as enemies to the Gods. The Thebæan Legion understanding this, did unanimously withdraw to Agaunum, a place eight miles off, called at this day St. Maurits, strong with inaccessible rocks. The Emperor missing them, when the rest came to give their oaths, fent officers to command their obedience; to whom the heads of the legion answered, "That for this end they left Octodurus, because they " heard they should be forced to facrifice. That being " Christians, and that they might not be defiled with " the altars of devils, they thought themselves obliged " to worship the living God, and to keep that religion, which they had entertained in the East, to the last " hour of their life. That as they were a legion, they " were ready to do any fervice in the war; but to return " to him, to commit facrilege, as he commanded, they "could not yield." The Emperor enraged, ordered every tenth man to be put to death, who chearfully offered their necks to the executioners. The only contention among them was, who should first undergo that glorious death. When this was done, the remainder encouraged one another; and still they refused to facrifice. The exasperated General commands a second decimation, which was immediately executed; and the remainder remainder ordered to return to Octodurus: which they still refusing, and he despairing to break their constancy, commands the whole army to fall upon them and cut them off; which they did, and divided the spoil. "Thus "says Dr. Cave", they died with their swords in their hands, when they might have preserved their lives in a place so advantageous, at least sold them at the dearest rate; which was the most unparallelled instance of Christian piety and submission that I think was ever known in the world."

^{*} See pag. 328.

[†] Apud Surium ad diem 22. Septembris, pag. 220, & seqq. ‡ Primitive Christianity, pag. 431, 436.

This flory was mightily improved in Britain under the reigns of King Charles and James II. to promote the then beloved doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Refistance. I shall not enter upon the justness of the confequence; this fingle fact is too narrow a foundation to bear the superstructure of tenets, which are of such importance: But even the matter of fact it felf is questioned by very learned critics and historians, Popish and Protestant, and particularly by Du Pin, and Spanbemius, not to infilt upon others. The former fays †, But it is furprifing, that neither Eusebius, nor the author of the book concerning the death of the perfecutors, thought to be Lactantius, contemporaries, had no knowledge of so remarkable facts; or that having knowledge of them, they should speak, as they did, of the Church then enjoying a profound peace, and an entire liberty. How can we reconcile that good-will with they say the Emperors had for the Christians, with the unbeard of cruelties executed in Gaul by the order of Maximinus, and at Rome by command of Diocletian? The fame author in another part of his works remarks ||, when discoursing of the works of Eucherius Lugdunensis, the supposed father of this story, The t the history of the puffien of St. Maurits, and the other Thebean martyrs, reported by Surius, on the 22d of September, and printed feparately by Stevarius, is not of the file with our St. Eucher; it may be the work of another St. Eucher, who affifted at the fourth council of Arles, in the year 524 or 529; bus

^{*} As above, pag.436.

⁺ Compendious History of the Church, Vol. 2. pag. 78. Bibliotheque du cinquieme Siecle, Tom. 2. pag. 175.

but he of whom we are speaking died in 454, as Prosper remarks in his chronicle. Spanhemius, after he has told the story, says ||, "In the mean time, as to this "fatal end of the Thebean legion, and as to this St. "Maurice and his companions, LaGantius of the death "of persecutors, speaks not one word; and he would or perfections, speaks not one word, and he would not have been filent in an affair so memorable, when

" he gives so accurate an account of the Diocletian perfecution, had it been real. Eusebius, Jerom, Sulpitius

" Severus, Prosper, and all the ancient historians are also

"filent about it; even the Greeks, as Metaphrastes, cited by Surius, Tom. 4. says, That Maurits and his com" panions were killed by Diocletian in Apamia in Syria,

"which vexes Baronius in his notes on the martyrology,

"September 22d. The faith of this affair is nothing more fure than many others of that kind, of which "there is no end, that are made up to be a foundation " of Churches and Monasteries in the West, from the "fabulous arts advanced by Gregory of Tours, Beda, "Ado, Metaphrastes, and the rest of the fathers of le"gendary tales." Thus these very learned men upon good reasons reject this story as a legendary tale.

Tho' the Tenth Perfecution pass a little into the fourth century, yet I shall take a view of it, before I conclude this chapter. Galerius Cæsar began to perfecute the Christians after his returning victorious from Persia in 297. The hatred which his mother inspired into him against them, made him that he could neither suffer any of them in his house, nor in his army. He deprived them of the offices they had about him, and gave orders to the Christian officers and soldiers, either to renounce their religion, or quit their offices and service. The General Veturius was charged to persecute the Christian soldiers in the year 302.

Diocletian and Galerius meeting at Nicomedia in Bithynia, where the former was making fumptuous buildings to equal those at Rome, says Lastantius*, there they passed Hift. Christiana, Sæc. 3. col. 771.

* De mortibus persecutorum, cap. 6.

Vol. I.

Bi

passed the winter considering upon methods to exterminate the Christians. Discletian opposed it a long time, but at last it was resolved upon. There in the 19th year of his reign, in the year of our Lord 303, upon the folemnity of our Saviour's Passion, he commanded the Churches to be pulled down to the ground*, the Bibles to be burned, the richer fort of Christians to be branded with infamy, and the vulgar to be made flaves. By fubfequent orders he deprived Christians of all protection by the laws, that they could have no reparation for any injury done them +. He commanded the bishops to be every where imprisoned, and forced to facrifice. This was but a prelude to what followed, other orders being iffued, commanding those who refused to offer facrifice, to be exposed to all manner of torments. It were tedious to reckon up the particular persons who suffered in this evil time: the eighth and ninth books of Eusebius's history are full of them. It may suffice us to observe from him, That the Christians were scourged to death, had their flesh torn off with pincers, were cast to lions and tygers, to wild boars and bears, provoked and enraged with fire to fet upon them, were burned, beheaded, crucified, thrown into the fea, torn in pieces by distorted boughs of trees ||, roasted at a gentle fire, or by holes made on purpose, had melted lead poured into their bowels. At Tyre in Phanicia, Eusebius fays he was eye-witness to it ±, when cruel wild beafts, that used to devour men, as lizzards, bears, boars, and the like, were let loofe against the martyrs, who stood naked to receive them, and invited them to prey upon their bodies as they were commanded; yet the beafts would not touch them, but rushed upon the spectators and perfecutors. You might have feen their youths, not twenty years of age, standing without chains, praying earnestly. to God; and tho' the beafts were breathing death and fury, yet they run away from these martyrs. A mad bull being let loose against five martyrs, tho' with its horns.

^{*} Eufeb. Hift. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 2, 3.

⁺ Lactantius Ibid. cap. 13. pag. m. 83. | Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 8. cap. 9.

‡ Ibid. cap. 7.

horns it threw up into the air some spectators, and almost killed them, yet all their endeavours could not make it touch these holy martyrs, but they were at last killed with the sword; and instead of a decent burial, had their bodies cast into the sea. Sylvanus the bishop of Gaza, with 39 others, were slain in the metal-mines of Phenicia*. Orders were given, that all the ministers of the Christian Churches should be put in prisons and chains. All jails were so full of bishops, presbyters, deacons, readers, exorcists, that there was no room for malesactors †. A whole city in Phrygia, where all the men, women, and children did worship Christ, was burned with fire, because the Questor, the captain, and the whole magistracy and inhabitants, would upon no account worship idols, but confessed themselves to be Christians.

Maximian fought an occasion to stir up Diocletian, to carry on the perfecution with vigour, by a fire that was raised in the Emperor's palace at Nicomedia ±, the blame whereof was laid upon the Christians, tho' Lastantius infinuates it was done by fome of Maximian's creatures , to advance his defigns. In the mean time, Diocletian went to Rome, to celebrate the folemnity of the twentieth year of his reign, which was observed with great festivals, and profane heathenish games. He had not staid long there, when he retired to pass over the winter at Ravenna. By the way he was feized with fickness, and the winter proving very cold, his disease increased, which made him think of leaving that place, and take a tour to Asia. When he came to Nicomedia, he was still worse, so as the report did sometimes go that he was dead. He had fits of madness, but with calm and fedate intervals ++. In this fituation of affairs, Maximian, a cruel, but cunning man, perfuaded Diocletian to refign the imperial purple, which he at last consented to, A.D. 304. or, as others, 305. and retired to Salone, where he lived private to the day of his death.

B b 2

 $A \mathfrak{r}$

^{*} Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 8. cap. 13. + Ibid. cap. 6. | Ibid. cap. 11. + Ibid. cap. 6.

^{} De mortibus per ecutorum, cap. 14. + Ibid. cap. 17.

At his refignation Conftantius and Galerius Maximian, were declared Emperors, and Severus with Maximin the younger created Cafars. Galerius Maximian, as he had begun, so he was the great instrument of carrying on the Perfecution. He was a cruel bloody tyrant, as Lastantius describes him ||. And the same author says *, "At that time there was a desolation made in the whole " world, if you except Gaul, where Constantius the father of Constantine the Great governed. These three " favage beafts have exercised their cruelties through all "the provinces of the east and west. If I had a hundred "tongues, and an hundred mouths, and the strongest of voice in the world, I could not describe all the crimes they commit, nor rehearse the names of the " punishments and tortures which their judges exercise " in the provinces, against so great a multitude of inno-" cent and holy perfons." It is indeed impossible for us to conceive, much more to express the cruelties of that time. Eusebius, who was an eye-witness of them, tells us +, "That they were innumerable, and exceeded all relation: What a multitude of men, says he, had "their right eyes bored out, and cauterized with a red-" hot iron, had their left legs burnt, and were condemned to the mines, not so much for their service as-" for their punishment! All which they endured with the most admirable and undaunted patience. "They thronged to the tribunals of their judges, and " freely told them what they were; despised the threat-66 nings and barbarities of their enemies, and received 66 the fatal fentence with a fmile. When perfuaded to be tender of their lives, and to compaffionate the " case of their wives and children, they bore up against "the temptation with a manly and philosophic mind, or rather with a foul truly pious and devoted to God, 66 fo as neither fears nor charms could take hold on " them; at once giving undeniable evidence of their courage and fortitude, and of that divine and unconceivable power of our Lord, that fo strengthned them, " as the acutest torments could not shake their stability, " but

"but they could as easily lay down their lives, as the best philosopher, says Origen *, could put off his cloak." One other passage I shall offer from Eusebius. He having discoursed of the impiety and horrid crimes of Maximian +, adds, The Christians, contemning death, undervalued his tyranny; men did endure sire, sword, crucifixion, cruel beasts, the bottom of the sea, the amputation and burning of the members of their body, the boring of their eyes, yea samine and chains; and in fine, all torments for religion, rather than for sake the worship of GOD, and embrace that of Idols. Women also as well as men, by the doctrine of the Word of God, received a manly courage, suffered the same torments, and obtained the same crown of glory, willing to lose their lives, rather than yield their bodies to be defiled. Of which he there gives many Instances.

Monsieur Godeau reckons, that in this Persecution there were no fewer than 17000 martyrs killed in one month's space. And he observes, "That during the " continuance of it, there were in the bare province of " Egypt no less than 144000 persons who died by the violence of their perfecutors, and 700000 who died " through the fatigues of banishment, or of the public works, to which they were condemned #." This perfecution feems to have been the first of the ten that affect. ed this Isle of Britain. I shall take occasion in the fixth chapter of this History to inquire into the origin of the British Churches: Mean time we may observe from Gildas, the most ancient British historian we have, that by this perfecution of Diocletian , "The Churches were "thrown down, and all the books of the Holy Scriptures 46 that could be found, were burnt in the streets, and 45 the chosen priests of the flock of our Lord, with the " innocent sheep, murdered; so as in some parts of the Ten years did this perfecution continue. The Emperors thought they had finished their work, and tell the B b 3 world,

44 province no footsteps of the Christian Religion did ap" pear."

 Gildas de excidio Britanniæ, non longè ab initio.

^{*} Contra Celfum, lib. 7. pag. 357. + Hift. Eccl. lib. 8. cap. 15. | Dr. Calamy's Sermon on Matth. xvi. 18.

world, as in some antient inscriptions * found at Clunia in Spain, That they had utterly destroyed the name and superstition of the Christians, and had restored and propagated the worship of the Gods. It feems they grant that Paganism was at a low ebb before they attempted to reftore it, and to destroy Christianity. But they were far deceived in their vain boasting offertions; Christianity was not destroyed, but rather farther propagated; and where they had done their utmost to ruin it, even there it had a glorious refurrection out of its grave, and paganism hastned to ruin, as we shall hear in the following chapter.

Divine vengeance did foon purfue many of the perfecutors, who had an active hand in this and the former perfecutions of the Christian Church. This is so frequently noticed by ecclefiaftic historians, that I cannot but with them also observe, That Nero being thrust from his throne, and perceiving himself in danger of death, became his own executioner +; Domitian was killed by his own fervants, Trajan died of a paralytic and hydropic difease, Hadrian of a very terrible diftemper, accompanied with terror of Mind, as appears by some of his last words formerly rehearsed | ; Antoninus Philosophus remitted the perfecution, and died of an apoplexy; Severus, after he perfecuted the Church, never prospered in his Affairs, and was taken off by the treachery of his wicked fon. Maximinus reigned but three years, and died a violent death . As to Decius, we have already heard that he was drowned in a marsh, and his body never found ++. Lastantius fays of him, That he received not the honour of being buried, but was marked out as an enemy to God, and his body exposed as a prey to fewls and beasts*. Of Valerian's death we have discoursed already +. And as to those concerned in this tenth and last Persecution, Discletion, foon after it commenced, was obliged to refign the empire, and when he was old was difordered in his mind, thunder-struck, or killed by poison. Maximiamis Perculeus was spoiled of his empire and strangled; Maximianus Galerius was fmitten with a dreadful ulcer, and nafty difease, as is at large described by Lagrantius ||. And 'tis to be remarked, that when the dileafe prevail'd upon him, he emitted an edict, recorded by Lattantius +*, and by Enfebius | +, ordering the Perfecution to be stopt; yea, allowing the Christians reaceably to enjoy their religion and their affemblies, and defiring them to pray to God for bis bealth, and the prosperity of the republic, that they might enjoy his protection, and live quietly under it. However, foon after this he expired in torments. Severus cut his own veins and died . As to Maxentius and Licinius, we shall hear of their end in the following chapter. They endeavoured to fet the Perfecution on foot again; but all in vain, it dwindled into nothing, and Christianity triumphed.

+ Sueton. Nero. cap. 49. | See above pag. 336. and the Authors there cited.  Spanhemii F. F. Hill, Christiana, col. 800. § 2.

++ See above pag. 359.

^{*} Diocletianus, jovius, et. maximian, herculeus, caes, augu. AMPLIFICATO. PER. ORIENTEM, ET. OCCIDENTEM, IMP. ROM. ET. NOMINE. CHRISTIANORUM. DELETO. QUI. REMP. EVERTEBANT. Gruteri Inicription, pag. 280. Num. 3. Diocletian, caes, avg. galerio, in. oriente. ADOPT. SVPERSTITIONE. CHRIST. VBIQUE. DELETA. ET. CVLTV. DEOR. PROPAGATO. Ibid. Num. 4. Cave's primitive Christianity, pag. 321. Spanhem. F.F. Hift. Christiana, col. $15.

This propagation and fuccefs of Christianity, notwith-standing all the Persecutions raised against it by the greatest potentates and emperors of the world, is a great glory to our Religion. This shews the protector thereof is God Almighty, and its original is divine; which I shall represent by translating the words of some of the ancients on this subject. Thus writes Sulpicius Severus ††, "Un-" der the reign of Diocletian and Maximian, for ten years the Persecution continually preyed upon the "Lord's people, during which space, the whole world "was full of the sacred blood of Martyrs; for that glo-" rious death was then more greedily desired, than by "wretched ambition bishoprics are now. Never was "the world more exhausted by wars, never did we con-Bb4" quer

^{} De mortibus perfecutorum, cap. 4. † See above pag. 364. and the Authors there cited. || De mortibus perfecutorum, cap. 31. &t feqq. † Ibid. cap. 34. ||† Hist. Eccl. lib. 8. cap. ultin.o.  Lactant. de mort. perfecut. cap. 26. †† Sacræ Hist. lib. 2. pag. m. 117.

" quer by a greater triumph, than when with ten years fusfering we could not be overcome." This may be of great force to persuade the world of the truth of the Christian Religion, and to make strangers and enemies to embrace it. Thus Tertullian speaks to the Gentiles*, "Good governours, you may torment, afflict and vex us; your wickedness does try our innocence, and " therefore God permits us to fuffer it. Your cruelty " is to no purpose; 'tis but a stronger invitation to bring others to our sect. The oftner we are mowed 66 down, the faster we spring up again. The blood of " Christians is the seed of the Church. Many of your " philosophers have exhorted their hearers to patience " under death and fufferings; as Cicero in his Tusculans, " Seneca, Diogenes, Pyrrbon and Callinicus; but could " never make fo many profelytes, with all their fine "discourses, as the Christians by their actions. That " very obstinacy you charge upon us, is a teacher to " instruct others. For who beholding such things, " will not be moved to enquire what is the truth whence "they proceed? and when he has found it, will em-" brace it? and having embraced, will defire to fuffer, "that he may obtain the full grace of God, and be affured of complete pardon by the shedding of his blood? Therefore we give thanks for your fentence, "knowing that the judgments of men do not agree with that of God: For when we are condemned by " you, we are absolved by God." Lastantius manages the fame argument with great strength of reason †. "Since, says he, our number is e encreased from among those who once worshipped " the Heathen Deities, and is never lessened, no not in the hottest persecution, men may be defiled by se feeing these abominable facrifices, but cannot be 44 turned away from God, for truth is strong and will " prevail. Who then is so blind and stupid, as not to " fee in what party true wisdom does reside? But alas " they are so blinded with rage and malice, as to think all to be fools, who, when it is in their power to escape punishment, chuse rather to be tortured and die. But they may be perfuaded this is no fuch folly, wherein to many thousands, through the whole world, " fo unanimously agree. Suppose women, through the weakness of their sex, (and they are pleased sometimes " to call our Religion old wives superstition,) should 66 be deceived, certainly men are wifer. If children " and young men are rash, yet old men, and those of " a mature age, are of a more folid judgment. If one city play the fool, innumerable others cannot be "guilty of the same folly. If one province and na-"tion want care and providence, all the rest cannot " lack understanding to judge what is right. Now, when the divine law is entertained, from the rising " of the fun to the going down thereof, and every " fex, age, nation and country ferve God with one heart and one foul; when there is every where the fame " patience and contempt of death, every one must be " persuaded, that it is not without cause, that's mainse tain'd even unto death. There's a folid foundation " for that religion that is not shattered by perfecutions " and injuries, but rather increased, and render'd more " firm and stable. When the very common " people fee men torn in pieces by various engines " of torment, and yet maintain patience unconquera-" ble, amidst their tired tormentors, they cannot but "think, as they have ground to do, that the confent of fo many, and their perseverance unto the death, cannot be in vain; and that even patience it felf, " without divine assistance, can never be able to over-" come fuch exquifite torments." This, and more to this purpose*, has this Apologist: And the experience of the world did verify the truth of it, Christianity gaining ground, and conquering opposition by nothing more than by the patience and constancy of its professors, till it had subdued the empire it self to the acknowledgment of the truth, as will appear more fully in the following chapter. Mean time I conclude this with with the words of the same Lastantius *: "Where are "now the magnificent and famous names of Jevii and "Herculei, which Diocletian and Maximian first info"lently assumed, and transmitted to their successors?

^{*} Apologet. cap. ult. pag. m. 55. † De Justitia, lib. 5. cap. 13. pag.m. 432, & segq.

^{*} See above page 286, 287.

378 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

"Let us celebrate the triumph of God with joy, and sing the victory of our Lord, giving him the praises which are due to his name; and by frequent prayers, night and day, let us desire that the peace which he has given to his Church, after ten years sufferings, he may confirm for ever."

C H A P. IV.

Of the Propagation of the Christian Religion, and of the Ruin of Paganism in the Fourth Century.

E have feen the Christian Church oppressed by a continued tract of violent persecution. But the kingdom of our Redeemer shall never be destroyed; it sha'l break in pieces and consume other kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. No less than a divine power could banish heathenish idolatry, which had been the religion of the world for so many ages, that powerfully influenced the minds of deluded men, and was firmly rooted by custom, laws, and inveterate prescription, supported by the arts of satan, and by all the power of the Romans, who had then dominion over the world: yet now we shall see idolatry ruined and abandoned, and the Roman Empire itself become Christian.

To set this great event in a true light, we must consider some things memorable in the life of Constantine the Great, the first Christian Emperor. His father's name was Constantius Chlorus, who savoured the Christians more than any of his Collegue Emperors. His mother was called Flavia Julia Helena. The learned † Spanheim reckons ^{*} Demortibus persecutorum, capite ult. + Spanhemii F.F. Hist. Christiana, Col. 822, Num. 2.

Chap.4. Life of Constantine the Great.

375

reckons him to have been born, A.D. 272. He refided for some time in the court of Discletian, and afterward in that of Galerius Maximian in the East. Galerius hated his father, and by sports and violent martial exercises. thought to have dispatched his son out of the way: but divine providence still preserved him. His father often fent for him, and he had all the inclination in the world to go to him; but his journey was often delayed by the influence of the Emperor with whom he resided. His father in his last sickness, renewed his importunity, and Galerius gave him a warrant to be gone, yet defigned to stop his journey; and therefore willed him to wait on him, and receive his final commands next morning: but he went off immediately, and at every flage ham-firinged all the post-horses, except those he rode on, to prevent being pursued. He arrived at York in Britain four days before his father died, which happened on the 25th day of July, in the year of our Lord 306. By his last will he succeeded as Emperor in the West, and was cheerfully submitted to by the army, and by all the western provinces. Soon after his father's funerals he past from Britain into Gaul, where he resided the first six years of his reign; all which time he continued in the religion wherein he had been educated, a Gentile, and fatisfied himself with the title of Cafar, not assuming that of Augustus or Emperor, expecting the senior Emperor, viz. Maxentius, would have invited him to accept of it; which he was far from doing. But he stood in no need of his approbation; his father's will, the universal confent of the army, and the whole West put his right beyond dispute. Besides Maximianus Herculeus, (who some years ago had laid down the purple, and did now endeavour to resume it; but upon some bad success in his affairs, fled to Gaul, under the protection of Constantine,) gave him the title of Augustus with his daughter Fausta to wife.

Constantine being informed from all hands, of the intolerable outrages and insolences committed by Maxentius, the Son of Maximianus Herculeus, who was made Emperor at Rome, and being solicited by an embassy

380 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

fent him by the fenate and people, took a resolution to free the city from the tyranny and extravagances of that usurper. When he engaged in this expedition, he began to think of some affistance * beyond the meer strength and courage of his army. He observed the fatal miscarriages of his predeceffors, who had worshipped a multiplicity of Gods by formal and superstitious rites; notwithstanding which, their wars were unsuccessful, and themselves were brought to unfortunate ends: whereas his own father, who acknowledged one only God, the fupreme governour of the world, and had protected and encouraged the Christians even in his own palace, had succeeded in his undertakings. He resolved then to lay afide the vulgar deities, and adhere only to the God of his father; in which design his mother Helena, a religious woman, encouraged him. To this one God he addressed himself, befeeching that he would make himself known to him. Heaven heard his prayer, and answered it in a miraculous manner, fo as Eusebius, who reports the matter, grants it would have been incredible, if he had not heard it from Constantine's own mouth +. The army being on their march, and the Emperor taken up in his ejaculations, when the fun was declining, there appeared a pillar of light in the heavens in the fashion of a cross, with this inscription, TOTTO NIKA, In this overcome. The Emperor and the whole army were amazed at this fight; but at night our Lord appeared to him in a dream, with the cross in his hand he had seen the day before, commanding him to make a royal standard like that he had feen in the heavens, and cause it to be borne before him in his wars, as an ensign of safety and victory. Early next morning he ordered workmen to do it with exquisite art and magnificence. The device, In this overcome, he not only wore in his shields afterward, as Eusebius tells us, but it appears also by some of his coins extant at this day, the standard or Labarum he carried always in the wars before him. Eusebius affures us he had often ^{*} Eusebius de vita Constantini, lib. 1. cap. 26, 27.

⁺ Eusebius de vita Constantini, lib. 1. cap. 28, 29.

Chap.4. Life of Constantine the Great.

3 8. I

A

often feen it *. The figure thereof may be observed in Spanhemius's Church-History +.

The Emperor had a mighty defire to be further instructed in these divine signs, and therefore called for fome Christian Bishops to instruct him, who explained the mysteries of our religion, of our Redeemer's incarnation, life and death, and of the way of falvation through him. He heard their discourses with pleasure. had them always with him, and took delight in reading the Scriptures, and ordered that God who had appeared to him, to be honoured with divine worship t. Yet he did not at first openly declare himself a Christian, but kept on the referve, and marched his army forward through Italy, to the very walls of Rome, where he encamped with 90000 foot, and 8000 horse in a plain before the city ||. Maxentius his adversary was a man who divided his time between vile debauchery  and profane heathenish superstition, never going out of the city, and feldom out of his palace. Now when he must stir abroad, he plied the altars with facrifices, confulted the Sibylline Books, and then goes to his army, which confifted of 170000 foot, and 18000 horse. The engagement was fierce and bloody, but many of Maxentius's army did not like him, having fmarted under his tyranny. Victory having hovered a while, rested on Constantine's side; the army of the enemy being routed, fled, thinking to escape the nearest way by a bridge of boats, which Maxentius had built over the Tyber, with springs to drown Constantine if he passed that way. He fell into the pit he had digged for others ††; for the engines giving way, the boats pressed with weight, sunk into the bottom of the river, and Maxentius himself with them, whose body being found, his head was struck off, and carried on a pole before the conquering army.

^{*} De Vita Constant. lib. 1, cap. 30. + Hist. Christiana in Fol. Sæc. 4, col. 825.

[#] Euseb. de Vita Const. lib. 1. cap. 32.

[|] Zofimus, lib. 2. pag. 86.

^{} Euseb. de Vita Constant, lib. 1, cap. 33 -- 36.

^{††} Ibid. cap. 37, 38.

382 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV. A fignal and entire victory being thus gained, Constantine made a triumphant entry into the city, the nobility and people calling him their Saviour, and the author of their happiness. He set up a monument of gratitude to God who had gained him the victory; the inteription thereof you have at the foot of the page ||. Having fettled affairs at Rome, and endeared himself to all forts of perfons, he began by degrees to declare in favour of the Christians. The first edict of that kind upon record, was that published at Milan, A.D. 312, by himself and his brother-in-law Licinius, who had some time since been declared Cæsar, where * they granted a general toleration to all religions, and more especially to Christians, that none should disturb them in their profession, or in their way of worship, nor hinder any who had a mind to embrace Christianity; and that their Churches, and places of public asfemblies, and all the incomes and revenues belonging to them, that had been confiscated, and taken away, should immediately be freely and entirely restored to them, and the prefent purchasers or possessions be repaired out of the treasury. A copy of this edict they fent to Maximinus, who then governed in the East. He being an obstinate Heathen, neither willing to grant, nor daring to deny their defires, directed a refeript to Sabinus +, "declaring " what care his predecessors D'ocletian and Maximian " had used to secure their religion against the encroach-" ments of Christianity: however his pleasure was, that " the governours of the provinces should use no severity

[&]quot; against the Christians, but treat them with mildness and moderation, and rather try by elemency and persuasion to reduce them to the worship of the Gods: but if they had rather persist in their own religion, they should be left to the freedom of their choice." This rescript was extorted, and so straitned, as it did little good. The Christians could not trust Maximinus: he promised only an indemnity from trouble; they durst neither [#] Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 9. cap. 9. Hoc. salvtari. signo. veraci. fortitydinis. indicio. civitatem nostram. jvgo. tyranni. ereptam. liberavi. denique. et. senatum et. popylym. ro. liberatym. prisco. splendori et. claritati, restityi.

^{*} Ibid. lib. 10. cap. 5. + Ibid. lib. 9. cap. 9.

Chap.4. Life of Constantine the Great.

383

neither build Churches, nor keep public assemblies, but only wait a more favourable opportunity.

Mean time Constantine did proceed with sincerekindness; he received the Christian Bishops with all honour and respect, entertaining them at his own table. He exempted them from all fecular employs, received their appeals, and appointed commissioners to umpire and end the controversies that arose among them; yea, freed the Churches from the taxes * ordinarily affessed upon all other persons. He took away the punishment by crucifixion, out of respect to our Saviour's Passion. He neglected the Ludi Sæculares, or folemn games kept once every hundred years with great magnificence, pompous facrifices, and a train of profane heathenish ceremonies. The time of their celebration was A.D. 313; but the Emperor took no notice of them, which Zosimus loudly complains of +, as a fign of the Overthrow of their Gentile Religion. It added to their trouble, that they found Maximinus in the East, upon whom they so much relied, begin to turn upon them; he being totally defeated by Licinius, tho' the foothfayers had promised him fuccess and victory, at his return home put several of them to death as impostors; and to keep in with a numerous party, he published an edict in behalf of the Christians ±, where he confirmed the rescript he had sent to Sabinus the year before, and supplied what was defective in it, by restoring their Churches with all those revenues and possessions that had been seized and brought in to the exchequer, and either fold or bestowed to public corporations or private persons.

Soon after this Maximinus was feized with torments all over his body, he became ftark blind, and wasted to nothing, and died at Tarfus, confessing on his death-bed, that it was a just punishment for his wicked proceedings against Christ and his religion. The Churches began to flourish, and the Christians then every where enjoyed a ferene and prosperous season.

But

Ŧ

^{*} Codex Theodofii, lib. 11. tit. 1.

⁺ Lib. 2. Cap. 7.

[‡] Extat apud Euseb. in Hist. Eccl. lib. 9. cap. 10.

384 Propagation of Christianity, Cent. IV.

But this tranquillity lasted not long, Licinius had hitherto dissembled with God, with Constantine, and with the world; but having got the whole eastern empire at his command, he put off the mask, and heartily espoused the cause of the heathens. By a law he expressly forbad Christian Bishops to go into the houses of the Gentiles, that they might have no opportunity to propagate Christianity among them *. Yea, he raised a hot persecution against the Church: only, to use the words of Socrates +, This was local, not universal; so far as the power of Licinius reached, he attacked Christians with borrid cruelty: fo that, as Eusebius observes ‡, The East and the West were like night and day, a darkness overspread the East, while the West had a sun-shine of prosperity and peace. To chastise Licinius's monstrous ingratitude, inconstancy and perfidy, Constantine resolved upon an expedition against him; the armies first met at Cybalis in Pannonia, where Licinius was routed. Afterward he recollected forces, and engaged in Thrace; at which time Constantine, in the midst of his Bishops and Chaplains, was earneftly by prayer foliciting heaven to be on his fide | ; while Licinius laughed at him, and calling for his priests and fortune-tellers, goes to facrificing, and enquired what judgment they made by the entrails of the beafts, and they all promifed him fuccefs. In a grove thick fet with images, full of lighted torches, after the usual heathenish facrifices were performed, he made an oration to his officers, which Eusebius fays he had from the mouth of those who heard it, telling them , The enemy who fights against us, is one who has renounced the religion of his country, and joined himself to an impious sett, who has chosen I know not what strange Deity for his God, with whose infamous sign he dishonours his army. This day will show which if us is in the right, whether ours or theirs be the true Gods. If this strange and obscure God of Con-· stantine shall get the better, no man will then any longer doubt which God he ought to worship, but will go over to the:

^{*} Socrates, Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 3. + Ibidem.

Chap.4. Life of Constantine the Great.

385

the most powerful, and bid adieu to those to whom we have ilghted tapers to so little purpose. But if ours carry the day, which no man can doubt, we may securely go on in our attempts against these contemners of the Gods. Constantine in the battle caused the imperial standard of the cross to be carried before him; which way soever it turned, the enemy fled, till their forces being wholly broken, the greater part of them threw down their arms and yielded. Licinius himself fled, and by his usual method of treachery, begged peace of Constantine, which was granted. But so soon as he got a little breathing, he raised a new army, and charged his soldiers to offer no violence to the standard of the cross, nor engage near it. The battle, tho' bloody, went against him; he sled to Nicomedia; whither Constantine soldiers and besieged him. He surrendred, and was fent to The salonica; where, upon attempting new seditions he was put to death, which Spanhemius * computes to have happened A. D. 324.

By the death of Licinius, the whole government of the Roman Empire devolved upon Constantine. He immediately restored tranquillity to the Christians, and directed several orders to the governours of the provinces, whereby they recalled the banished, released those who had been confined, restored those who had been put out of their offices and estates which had been unjustly taken away; fet at liberty the imprisoned, and those who had been condemned to mines or other flavery, and bountifully rewarded all of them, rescinding all the persecuting constitutions of Licinius. As for such who had suffered martyrdom, he commanded their goods and lands to be restored to those who were next in kindred; or, where they had no relations, to be appropriated to the use of the Church +, as appears by his large edict fent to the governours of Palestine. Eusebius says he copied it from the authentic law that was kept among them, under the Emperor's own hand . The like was probably fent to other places.

The

VOL.I.

^{*} Hist. Christiana, Folio, col. 829. + Euseb. de Vita Constantins, lib. 2. cap. 19—21.

† Ibid. cap. 24.

386 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

The Gentiles having taken great encouragement under the patronage of Licinius, Constantine found himself obliged to put some check upon them, which he did by laws directed to Maximus, the governour of the city *, and to the people, which may be computed, by the date of the confuls, to have been in the year of our Lord 319. Forbidding the Aruspices, and the rest of the divining tribe, to exercise their skill in any private bouse, under the pain of being burned; and the person who received them into his house, to have his goods confiscated and himself banished: yet they had leave to exercise their art in public temples. Two years after this he gave orders, that the answers of these diviners should be sent to the Emperor in writing †. This was a great restraint upon them. Six months after, he prohibited all magic charms against the health or life of any person, or to inveigle affections in unchaste love, to cure distempers, or drive away storms and tempests ‡. The same year he provided, that slaves who formerly used to be set free in pagan temples, might be set at liberty in Christian Churches, in presence of the Bishop ||, and that this might be performed on the sabbath; tho' all contentions and law-fuits were forbid on that day.

He took also strict care for the observation of the Lord'sday, ordering it to be set apart for prayer and holy exercises, that all persons, as far as possible, might be induced to observe it; that his great officers and commanders in the army might set them a good example , by attending the Emperor in his devotions on that day; and that the very heathens in the army should be imployed in prayer to God, as the only giver of victory. To this end he composed a form of prayer, and ordered them to learn it by heart. The like care he took for observation of Friday, in memory of our Saviour's Passion.

The Gentiles vexed with this prosperity of the Chri-

The Gentiles vexed with this prosperity of the Christians, forced them to join in celebrating their Lustra, their ^{||} Ibid. lib.4. tit. 7. lege unicâ.  Eufeb.de Vita Conftantini, lib.4. cap. 18, 19, 20.

Chap.4. Life of Constantine the Great.

their processions attended with facrifices and hymns. This was complained of to Constantine, who, by a law, computed May 24, A. D. 323 +, expressly forbids any such compulsion to be used towards the Christians, under the penalty, that the breakers of this mandate, should be publickly beaten with clubs if a plebeian, and severely fined if of better rank. In this edict he calls Christianity the most holy law, and Gentilism, alienam superstitionem, a strange superstition.

He also took care that none should be governours or presidents, but who were Christians; or if Gentiles, that they should offer no facrisces ||. He extends this even to the Pretorian Presect, the highest office in the Empire. He published another law, which he sent to the governours of the Provinces, for erecting, enlarging and beautifying Christian Churches at his own charge; notice whereof he gave to the bishops of the several Churches. That to Eusebius, being the first of that kind, was written in the Year 324, soon after the deseat of Licinius, whom he calls the great Dragon, which God by his ministry had removed from the government. This letter is still extant *. The form of these ancient Christian Churches, and several things memorable about them, may be seen in Spanheim's large Church History ‡.

The Emperor also wrote a large pathetic exhortatory epistle to the provincial governours of the East, where, with great wisdom and piety, he exhorts all his subjects to embrace Christianity |||, a Religion to which even the heathen deities gave testimony; whereof, he assures them, he himself was a witness, that Apollo's oracle, out of a cave or dark recess, gave this response, That certain righteous persons where the cause why he could not any longer give true answers, and therefore the Tripos uttered salse divinations. When the Emperor Diocletian,

c 2 whose

3

[†] Codex Theod. lib. 16. tit. 2. lege 5. Sozomen, hist. eccl. lib. 1. cap. 8.

^{*} Apud. Euseb.de vita Const. lib. 2. cap. 41; ‡ Hist. Christiana in solio, col. 861, & seqq.

H Euseb. de vita Const. lib. 2, cap. 43, --- 46, whose court he then, being a young man, attended, asked, Who these just men were? one of the priests answered, they were the Christians. Which so enraged the bloody Emperor, that he emitted most cruel edicts against them, commanding the judges to provide more exquisite torments than those formerly used. Tho' Constantine used prayers and arguments to convert the Gentiles to the truth, yet he would not force them to change their Religion, but left them to the freedom of their own choice. About the fame time he repealed the edicts of his predeceffors, which they, to maintain the heathenish superstition, had emitted against the Christians, in the time of the persecutions*, and the acts of inferior judges. But this was not to extend to any thing which they had done warrantably according to law.

Peace and tranquillity being restored to the world, Constantine transferred the seat of the empire from Rome to Byzantium in Thracia, which he re-edified, beautified and enlarged with all the ornaments art could contrive, and by a law, commanded it should be called New Rome; tho', in despite of his edict, it retains the honour of his name, and is called Constantinople to this day. He finished and dedicated it, A.D. 330.

He built many noble churches and oratories, both in city and country, wherein he fufferred no Gentile altars or images to be placed, nor any heathenish festivals to be folemnized †. Yea the folly, imposture and vanity of these abominable idols was exposed in the streets. Yet he did not demolish or deface all the heathen temples, some of them were flanding in the reign of the Emperor Theodosius, as we find from Libanius a pagan philosopher, who wrote about that time. He || complains loudly of Conftantine for spoiling of their temples, as if for this his posterity had been cut off: Yet he owns that some of these buildings remained, tho' spoiled of their honour. Tis certain the capital at Rome, the temple of Serapis at Alexandria, of Apollo at Daphne, in the suburbs of Antioch,

^{*} Sozomen. Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. S. + Euseb. de vita Constant. lib. 3. cap. 48. || Libanii oratio de templis, pag. 9. & 22

Antioch, fome ancient temples at Edeffa, Gaza, and in fome other places, remained long after Conflantine's time; and we shall meet with some of them afterward. At this day the Pantheon at Rome, from being a temple to heathens, is converted to a church for popifh idolaters. But this Christian Emperor not only took away the pagan temples, but also the treasures and revenues belonging to them, which he imployed in building those magnificent structures, wherewith he adorned the imperial city.

Nor did the barbarous nations go without their share, in the happy influences of Christianity. The Indians were brought over to the Christian Faith by the ministry of Frumentius *, who had been educated for the greatest part of his time among them. Athanasius having ordained him, sent him back to them, to advance further this good work. The Iberians, since called Georgians, are faid to have been converted by a female captive, who being a Christian, was famous among them for the piety of her life, and her miraculous cures: among others, she cured the Queen of the country. And upon her folicitations, and a remarkable deliverance which the King received, he was perfuaded to become a Christian, and became so zealous as to preach to his fubjects, and exhort them to embrace the faith. A Church was erected, and an embasily sent to Constantine, to request that Bishops and Preachers might be fent among them, to carry on and advance that good work; which was accordingly done. The Emperor Constantine made Bacurius the King of that country to be comptroller of his houshold. He was a great Friend to true Religion. When he commanded in Palestine, Russin Control had the relation from him and other particular fays he had this relation from him, and other particulars to be had in that author +. The like success the Christian Religion had in other countries, of which Sezomen gives this account ||; That the barbarous Nations having made Cc 3 feveral irruptions into Thracia, many Christian Priests were taken captives, who being of a holy blameless life, did reprove the vices of the Barbarians; and by calling on the Name of Christ did cure their sick. This made them see an excellency in their Religion, and enquire after it; and the captives employed all their time to promote their conversion. By these means were the inhabitants upon the Rhine, the Celtæ, some of the remote parts of Gaul, and the people upon the river Danube, brought to entertain the Gospel.

^{*} Rufini Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 4. Socrates lib. 1. cap. 19. Sozomen lib. 2. cap. 24. See also Vol. 2. of this History, chap. 7. Church of +Rufini Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 10. Ethiopia. Hist. Eccl. lib. 2.cap. 6.

The Emperor had hitherto tried by patience and perfuafion to reclaim the Gentile world; but finding very many obstinate, he proceeded to root out idolatry by rougher methods. To this end he ordered commissioners every where to open the pagan temples, to throw up the doors of the Revestries, so as those mysteries, which formerly none but the Priests might behold, were now publickly exposed to the eyes of the people. Many of the Temples were untiled and laid open to the injuries of the weather: the common people were afraid; the Priests and Flamens, being left alone, submitted, and with their own hands brought forth their idols, stript of their ornaments, and their precious things which were faid to have come from Jupiter *. The Statues of gold and filver were melted down, and coined into money. Some of the choicest of their idols, which were curiously wrought, were brought to Constantinople, and there drawn with ropes up and down the streets, and set for the people to behold and laugh at. There you might fee the Pythian, here the Sminthian Apollo +; in the Circus, the Tripodes brought from Delphos; in the palace, the Muses of Helicon; and in another place, the statue of Pan; all monuments of the madness of heathenish superstition.

At Aphacus in Phanicia, near the top of Mount Libanus, stood a samous Temple in the midst of a grove, dedicated to Venus, where men worshipped, while the women prostituted themselves to all manner of wickedness in every corner. This Temple the Emperor commanded to be pulled down, its gifts and ornaments to be disposed of, and that leud society to be scattered * There was another dedicated to her at Heliopolis, in the fame country, where the Men gave leave even to their wives and daughters to proflitute themselves in honour of the goddess: this he abolished, and built a Church in the room of it. Abrabam's Oak at Mamre, which for fo many ages had been annually defiled with Jewish and Heathenish solemnities, he removed, and erected a Christian Church there. Upon these accounts Eunapius, a bigotted Pagan, who mortally hated the Christians, fays +, Constantine destroyed the most beautiful temples of the gods over the whole world, and erested Christian churches or bouses, oiknuara, in the room of them.

be

Chap. 4. Life of Constantine the Great.

At Alexandria the Emperor dispersed and banished the Androgyni, or Priests of Nile, who used to perform ridiculous ceremonies to that river, which they accounted a deity; yea, fome of them, fays Eusebius; were put to death for their impieties and obscenities. He caused the Nilometrium, whereby they used to measure the height of that river, to be removed out of the Temple of Serapis, unto the Christian Church at Alexandria ||. When the Gentiles cried out the goddess would be angry, Nile would no more overflow its banks, the event shewed the predictions of their Priests foolish, the river overflowing in greater measure next year than before. In short, by several laws he forbad to offer facrifices, to erect images to the gods, or to exercise any of their mysterious rites. By these means the kingdom of Satan did fall like lightning, the old Serpent fell under the power of the Cross. In memory whereof, this good Emperor caused some of his coins, still extant, to be stamped on the reverse, with the figure of a Serpent bowing under, and struck through with the banner of the Cross; all which, fays Eusebius , was foretold by the prophet Isaiab xxvii. 1. When God in his infinite goodness had accomplished so great a reformation, and advanced Cc 4 Chri-

^{*} Ibidem, cap. 56. See in this History, chap. 2. pag. 202.
† Eunapius de vitis Philosophorum, pag. m. 34.
† De vita Constantini, lib. 4. cap. 25. | | 1bid. Socrates H. l. Ecc.]
1. 1. cap. 18. |  De vita Constant. lib. 3. cap. 3. lib. 1. cap. 18.

392 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

Christianity, which had been so much trampled upon, to be the Religion of the empire; Bishops or Pastors were settled every where in the Churches. Of many of them who were in the principal cities, there are yet catalogues extant in the Ecclesiastic Historians. The great work for which God had raised up this first Christian Emperor being done, his death soon approached: but before we discourse of it, we may surther observe;

That by the confent of ancient Historians * it appears that this religious Prince Constantine the Great, was not baptized till a little before his death. When he found himself in a bad state of health, he defired to be carried to Helenopolis in Bithynia, where he was first made a Catechumen, he kneeling, and humbly befeeching the pardon of his fins; thence he went to the suburbs of Nicomedia, and called for the Bishops, desiring the seal of eternal life, promising that if God prolonged his life, he would endeavour a holy conversation: whereupon Eusebius of Nicomedia baptized him in a folemn manner, being clothed with white garments, and laid upon his bed, he foon after died in full hope of eternal life. If the grounds of this delay of his baptism be enquired into, Spanhemius + offers the following reasons: 1/1, It was an opinion then received, that Baptism might be delayed even to the end of one's life, fince in this washing of regeneration there was an expiation made for all fin and guilt. 2dly, Constantine resolved to delay it, till he had occasion to wash in the waters of Fordan after our Saviour's example, which is the reason assigned by Euse-bius and Theodoret ||. 3 dly, To these he adds, that the Emperor being much employed in wars, during the course of his life; and being obliged, for reasons of state, as is already noticed, to cut off his brother-in-law Licinius, and his fon Crispus, with his wife Fausta, for alledged incest; the consciousness of these facts made him delay his being admitted to the holy Mysteries till near ^{*} Ibid. lib. 4. cap. 61, 62. Hieronym. in Chronico ad A.D. 340. Socrates Hift. lib. 1. cap. 39. Sozomen. Hift. lib. 2. cap. ult. Theodoret. Hift. lib. 1. cap. 31. + Hift. Christiana in Fol. Sec. 4. col. 834, 835. | 1 ocis citatis.

Chap.4. Constantine the Great's Death. 393 the end of his life. This great Prince died, as Spanhe-the end of his life. This great Prince died, as Spanbe-mius * and others reckon, May 22. A. D. 338. of his age the 64th, and of his reign the 31st year; Titianus and Felicianus being then consuls.

His death was a fignal loss to the Church, and a great grief to all good men. In his time heathenish idolatry was banished out of the principal cities of the Roman empire, and remained only in some country villages, and therefore in the Theodofian Codex + 'tis called Paganism; which name we shall frequently use in the sequel of this hiftory. He erected many Christian Schools throughout the empire, and enriched the Christian Church with ecclefiaftic revenues and benefices; granting to the same not only the revenues that belonged to the Gods of the Gentiles, to their Temples, Priests, Flamens, and to the rest of that tribe, but also large donatives over the Roman empire, and the tithes, with the inheritances of martyrs, confessors, and banished persons, where they wanted heirs and fucceffors; with power to others to extend their liberality the same way. All this appears from the imperial conftitutions in the Theodofian Codex ||, and other ancient writers quoted at the foot of the page ‡. From this time riches did increase in the Church: but the daughter devoured the mother; fchifms, divisions, and many superstitious customs crept in with them. Eusebius gives an excellent character of this great Prince +, That armed with no other breast-plate than that of piety, and carrying no other banner save that of the cross, he triumphed over his enemies and their ido's. His vacant time he spent in prayer, reading the scriptures, and other divine exercises. He formed the whole court after this example. He founded new Churches, and rebuilt old ones with great magnificence, as at Nicomedia, Constantinople and Antioch. Such an eminent piety God rewarded with the enlargement of the empire, ^{*} Ubi supra. † Codex Theodosii, lib. 16. 10. de Paganis. || De Episcopis, Ecclesiis, Clericis, Judæis, Paganis, Sacrificiis. † Euseb. de vita Constantini, lib. 2. cap. 35, 36. Sozomen. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 5. Ambrosii Epistolæ, lib. 5. Epist. 30, 31. † De laudibus Constantini, cap. 9.

394 The Sons of Constantine the Great.

the prosperity of his family, and with a crown that fadeth not away.

Constantine upon his death-bed divided the empire among his three sons; to Constantine the eldest he assigned Britain, Spain, Gaul; to Constantine the second, he gave Mysia, Thrace, the East, and Egypt; to Constants, the youngest of his sons, he lest Italy, Illyricum, Macedonia, Greece, with those parts that border on the Euxine sea, and the remainder of Afric, so far as then belonged to the Roman Empire. These three Princes were Christians, and continued to protect our Holy Religion. Constantine the eldest brother had scarce reigned three years, when quarrelling with his brother Constant about the division of the empire, he marched his army to Aquileia, and was there killed in battle, April 341. Thereby Constants remained master of the West, and Constantius of the East.

The reign of these two brothers was so taken up with the Arian and other controversies, which distracted the world, and divided the State as well as the Church, which I am not now concerned to account for, that we meet with very little that concerns the Propagation of Christianity and the Overthrow of Paganism in their time. Yet we may observe, that Sozomen gives this account of the state of affairs then *, "The presidents of " the Churches did walk circumfpectly; multitudes of " believers, directed by them, took care to worship " and ferve our Lord Christ; the Christian Religion was " every day on the growing hand; the zeal, virtue and wonderful works done by Church-men did draw " many Heathens from Gentile superstition. "Emperors trod in their father's steps, in their care " and kindness to the Church, investing the clergy, their "children and domestics with many peculiar privileges and immunities; they not only confirmed their father's laws, but enacted new ones, prohibiting any " to offer facrifices, or to pay adoration to the images of the Gods, or exercise any part of Pagan supersti-"tion. The temples that stood either in the cities or

Ch. 4. The Sons of Constantine the Great. 395

" in the fields, they commanded to be destroyed; others of them were given to the Church, where they wanted

" either room or materials to build with. It was their " great care either to repair ruined Churches and Ora-" tories, or erect new ones, and these very magnificent;

" among which the Church of the Emessenes is most " beautiful."

After the battle at Aquileia, the Emperor Constans enjoying peace, discover'd his zeal against the Pagans, restraining their folly by the following law *: The august Emperors Constantius and Constans to Madalian Vice-Pratorian Præfe&: " Let superstition cease; let the mad-" ness of sacrificing be abolished: for whosoever shall " presume, contrary to the constitution of our father, a "Prince of bleffed memory, and contrary to the com-" mand of our clemency, to offer facrifices, let a proper " and convenient punishment be inflicted, and execu-" tion immediately done upon him." Received, Marcellinus and Probinus being confuls, that is, A.D. vulg. 341.

Encouraged by this and the like laws, Julius Firmicus Maternus wrote his book de errore profanarum religionum, which he dedicated to the two brother Emperors; where after he had exposed the notorious absurdities of Paganism, he desires †, " the Emperors to go on and make " a perfect reformation, and by fevere laws to cut off " the fuperstition that did yet remain, that the Roman " world might no longer be infected with fuch perni-"cious wickedness and impieties, which gain ground " by custom and connivance. They must not in this " case stand to humour every palate. Inveterate dis-" eases are not to be cured but by unpleasing medi-" cines.—— A little more to what they had already "done would lay the devil fully prostrate, and make " the contagion of idolatry, the venom whereof grew " weaker every day, wholly to evaporate and expire.-"Great things God had already done for them as a reward of a well-begun zeal and piety, and greater

" bleffings were referved, when they shall have crowned

[†] De errore profanarum * Codex Theodofii, lib. 16. tit. 10.1.2. religionum, cap. 17, _____ 21, & seqq.

396 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

"this work, which should oblige them with a pure mind to call for divine affistance."

Magnentius, a Barbarian by birth, having made himfelf considerable in the Roman armies; usurped the supreme power, assumed the imperial purple, A. D. 350. caused the Emperor Constans to be murder'd, and made himself master of several provinces. Constantius, Emperor in the East, marched his army against him, defeated him in a bloody battle at Mursia in Pannonia, and having forced him out of Italy into Gaul, and overthrown his army once and again, the usurper at last killed himself at Lyons, A. D. 353. Thus Constantius became master of the whole empire, both in the East and West.

Whereas the Usurper Magnentius, to gain favour with the Gentiles, had given them leave to celebrate their facrifices in the night, Constantius abolished those nocturnal facrifices*, taking away the licence that had been granted for them; and by another law +, prohibited all manner of facrifices, and commanded that both in city and country the Temples should be shut, and none suffer'd to go into them under pain of death, and confifcation of moveables, to the contemners of the law. Confrantius was a great enemy to all magic, and curious diabolic arts, than which nothing was more common a-mong the Gentiles. Indeed it was the life and spirit of their declining superstition: Therefore, A. D. 357, he emitted a law ||, "That no man, under pain of death, " might dare to confult any of these masters of divi-" nation, who in the body of the rescript are designed by their several titles, viz. Mathematici, who judged by the course and position of the stars; Haruspices, "who made judgment of future events by facrifices, " and the entrails of the beafts that were flain; Harioli, " who attended the altars, offer'd up facrifices and fup-" plications, and received the answer which the Demon returned; Augures, who divined by the flight and chattering of birds; Vates, who gave out Enthusiastic " inspira-

^{*} Codex Theodossi, lib. 16.tit. 10. l.5. + Ibid. l.4. | Ibid. lib. 9. tit. 16. l.4.

Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV. 397 inspirations; Chaldeans, who calculated nativities; Magi, who dealt in charms and conjurations, with " odd schemes of words; and Malefici, who traded in " necromancy, and under that pretext committed great " wickedness: The Emperor orders, that no person " should consult any of these, that this curiosity of di-" vination should be for ever filent; and that whoso-" ever does disobey this mandate, shall be punished " with the avenging fword." In that fame year comes out another law against magicians*, who undertook to disorder the lives of innocent persons, to conjure up the fouls of the departed, to raise storms and tempests, and destroy their enemies by their wicked arts: these, as enemies to human nature, he commands to be destroyed, ferali pefte; that is, as fome think, to be burned alive; or rather, to be thrown to wild beafts: either of them fevere punishments, but not exceeding the merit of the crimes. In the end of April the same year he came to Rome, where he regulated feveral things, and took away the famous altar and image of Victory, the only idol left there. Tho' it had been removed by Constans, yet it was restored by Magnentius; But was now taken away a fecond time by this Emperor Constantius, to the great grief and refentment of the Gentiles. Symmachus raifed a great bustle about it, as we shall hear afterwards. After a month's stay at Rome, the Emperor returned to Milan, and published a new law against divination +, discharging all under the highest penalties, either in his own court or in that of Julian, then created Cæsar, who kept a company of magicians about him, under the notion of pect him.

Constantius died at Mopsucrenæ, in the confines of Cilicia and Cappadocia, A.D. 361. as he was preparing to meet his cousin and successor Julian, who designed to come in a hostile manner against him. 'Tis said || he bemoaned at his death that he had named Julian his successor, that he had put to death many of his own kindred, philosophers, which made the Emperor mightily to suf-

^{*} Ibid. l. 5. † Codex Theodossi, lib. 9. tit. 16. l. 6. Theodorer, Hist. Eccl. lib 3 cap. 1. Nazianzen, O1at. 21.

kindred, and had so zealously promoted innovations in the Church, changing the doctrine left by his father.

We proceed now to take a view of the state of affairs under the reign of Julian, and of the means which the enemy of mankind then used, as his last effort to suppress Christianity and restore Paganism. In order to this, we may consider a little the life of that prince.

Julian was the youngest of the sons of Julius Constantius, brother by the father's fide to Constantine the Great. He was born at Constantinople in the year 331. At feven years of age he was committed to the tutorage of Mardonius the eunuch, who trained him up in virtue and learning, under the best teachers. The Emperor afterward committed him to the care of Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, giving him a particular charge that this young Prince should hold no correspondence with Libanius*, a famous Orator, but a professed Pagan. 'Tis very difficult to chain up inclinations: This Orator's books and discourses were privately conveyed day by day, which he read with great delight, and laid before him as his copy. Maximus came also to Nicomedia, who under pretence of teaching Julian Philosophy, confirmed him in his love of Paganism, and by a pretext of magic, foftered him in the belief of the common report, that he should one day be Emperor. However to please Constantius, he professed himself a zealous Christian +: yea, to make a greater shew, entred into a monastic life, suffered himself to be ordained reader in a Church, where he read the Scriptures to the people before the congregation, and join'd with his brother Gallus to erect a stately oratory to the memory of St. Mamas the martyr. But Nazianzen tells us ||, That Gallus's part of the Church went up prosperously, the Lord accepting it, as he did the facrifice of Abel; while Julian's part could take no effect, the Lord rejecting it as he did Cain's oblation. In some places the foundations could not be laid, laid, the stones were thrown up again, and other places were immediately shattered and pulled down to the ground. Sometimes he could not forbear reasoning with his brother Gallus in desence of paganism. Indeed Libanius his great friend owns his hypocritical dealings, saying *, He was obliged to dissemble; it broke his heart to see the Temples desolate, the sacrifices forbidden and neglected, altars and victims taken away, the priests banished, and the revenues of the Temples shared among the impure; and that it was not the desire of grandeur made him to affect the Empire, but to have opportunity to restore the worship of the gods.

^{*} Socrates Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 1.

⁺ Sozomen lib. 5. cap. 2. Theodoret, Hist. lib. 3. cap. 2.

^{||} In Julianum orat. 1. pag. m. 593.

He left Nicomedia, and retired to some part of his paternal estate; and when he sound the times dangerous, by the mediation of the Empress Eusebia, who always stood his friend, he got leave to retire to Athens †, under pretence to perfect his studies, but indeed to enjoy the company of philosophers, and pagan priests, and to consult more secretly about suture events. And he wanted not enough of that tribe to attend him. Nay, he frequented the most celebrated oracles of Greece, and there was initiated in their solemn rites and mysteries. Gregory Nazianzen was wont to foretel what a course he would take, saying, See what a mischief the Roman Empire nourishes in its own bowels #!

His brother Gallus, who had been some years Cæsar, was about this time, for some treasonable innovations, put to death. But things going to wreck in Gaul and Germany, the Emperor Constantius was necessitated to think of another partner, the Empress Eusebia, who was Julian's constant friend, for which he praises her in an oration yet extant ||, whispered into his ear, "That "none was so sit as Julian, he being a young man, of an undesigning temper, wholly addicted to his books, unacquainted with tricks of ambition. If success attended his enterprizes, the glory would redound to the ^{*} Libanii epitaphium in Juliani necem, pag. 265.

Emperor: if he miscarried and was cut off, they hould be rid of him, and there would be none left of " the royal family, to hatch any dangerous defigns " against the Empire." He was then sent for to court. Before he left Athens, with prayers and tears he recommended himself to the care of Minerva, the tutelar goddess of that place *. Being invested with the title and ornaments of Cæsar, he was sent into Gaul with a retinue to whom he was a stranger, and there honourably received. He professed himself a Christian, and would fometimes, especially on the feast of Epiphany, go to the Christian Church, and offer up his prayers to God +. What he did otherwise was by stealth, rising at midnight, and doing devotions to Mercury #. Eunapius fays ||, He was sent into Gaul to be lost, but did, by the favour of the gods, possess the whole of Gaul, and no body knew that he was addicted to the worship of the gods.

Julian's prosperous success in Gaul, where he overthrew the Barbarians, and vanquished seven German Kings, is at large narrated by Ammianus Marcellinus; and I need not trouble my reader with it, since it does not concern the subject I am upon. Only I may observe, that he so far gained the affections of the Roman legions, as they proclaimed him Emperor in the year of our Lord 360. He affumed the title, and wrote to Constantius, that it was a force imposed upon him by others, but if he tleased he was ready to lay it down again, and return to the capacity of Cæfar. Constantius told the Embassadors, That if Julian would secure his head from the vengeance due to such an insolence, he would not only quit that pretended title, but also the Cestarian dignity, and returning to a private station, would refer the matter to his sovereign. Julian diffaining to do this, march'd his army to the east. had long before this time, among his confidents, abjur'd Christianity; but his army being for the most part made up of Christians, he durst not yet publickly renounce it, and therefore came into the Church on Christmas day, and ^{*} Juliani Epiftolæ ad S. P. Q. Atheniensem, operum pag. 275. † Amm. Marcellinus, lib. 21. pag. m. 553. † Ibid. lib. 16. pag. m. 500. † De visis Philesophorum, pag. 97.

Chap.4. The Life of Julian 401 and did his devotions among the rest. But the better he secured his interest in the army, the more he opened his inclinations to paganism. All along his march he wrote to the great cities of the Empire, cunningly accommodating himself to their several humours and interests. Some of these letters are yet extant *. In that to Maximus, a pagan philosopher, he says more openly +, That be would be glad to know that they publickly facrificed to the Gods. He affured him that the army was of his Religion, and that in gratitude to the Gods several becatombs had be n already offered. The pagans knowing his mind in too many places, and especially in Greece, began to open their temples, to trim them up, and to offer facrifices. All which he encouraged by his counfel, direction and example. He arrived on the borders of Illyricum in harvest. When he came to Dacia, he heard the news that Constantius had died at Motsucrenæ, in the confines of Cilicia, as he was coming with a great army to encounter him.

Fulian being thus delivered from the fears of a rival in the Empire, marched with all speed to Constantinople, which he entered December 11, 361 ±. Having solemnized the sunerals of Constantius, he began to let the world fee what Religion he intended to espouse; for, as Sozomen || informs us, be ordered the pagan temples to be set open, those that were decayed to be repaired; where new ones were wanting, he directed them to be built, the endowments of them be restored; he caused altars to be every where set up; he himself did publickly sacrifice, and shewed great bonour to all that had any regard to that superstition; and, in a word, took care that the whole train of Gentile rites and ceremonies should be again brought in use. And Libanius a pagan philosopher tells us, You could go no where, but you might behold alters and fires, blood, perfumes, and smoke, ^{*} Inter opera Juliani Gr. Lat. edita Lipsiæ 1696.

[†] Ibid. Epistola 38. pag. 414. ‡ Ammian. Marcellini lib. 22. near the beginning.

Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 3.  Orat. in Cave's Introduction to the Lives of the Fathers, Cent. 4.  Orat. in Juliani necem.

402 Means Julian used to restore Paganism.

smoke, and priests attending the sacrifices without fear or interruption. He assumed the title of Pontifex Maximus, and valued it as equal to that of Emperor *. He profaned and renounced his Baptism, by polluting himself with the bloody rites of paganism, which he opposed to the Christian method of initiation. Every morning he facrificed to the Gods, and affifted at the public facrifices; he wrote to the cities most devoted to Gentilism, promifing to grant whatfoever they would ask. great an example made the pagans in every place very infolent, fo as they not only celebrated their facrifices, but did also deride the Christians by all ways they could imagine +. He recalled the laws made against heathenish fuperstition by Constantine the Great and his fons, and confirmed those made by his pagan predecessors in favour of it. Theodoret says \ddagger , "That at Ascalon and "Gaza, towns of Palestine, the heathens about this "time cut up the bellies of men in holy orders, and " of women that professed virginity, filled them with "wheat, and threw them to be meat to the fwine; " and at Sebasta they opened the coffin of John the Bat-" tift, burnt his bones, and fcattered his ashes."

It feems agreeable to the defign of this hiftory to lay before the reader the means Julian used to restore Paganism and suppress Christianity, these being among the last efforts of this kind that Satan used to accomplish so wicked an end. First then, Julian set himself to reform paganism, and the professors thereof, from more gross corruptions, and to introduce many excellent constitutions he had observed among the Christians. The abominations of the Gentiles in their lives, and in their vile worship, had been exposed to the view of the world, and he found no way to regain credit to his Religion, but by cutting off what was offensive, and planting what was more useful in the room thereof. Therefore in a dis-^{*} Libanii Orat. 8. pag. 245. † Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 5. ‡ Ibid. cap. 6.

Ch.4 Means Julian used to restore Paganism. 403 discourse of this Emperor, of which a part remains , " He presses the magistrates to take care that men live " justly according to the laws, and express piety to God, "and humanity toward men; be chaste and regular in their persons; that they entertain venerable apprehensions of the Gods, approach their temples "with fanctity, adore their images and statues, as if "they beheld themselves present before their eyes. "For we are not, fays he, to look on altars and images as Gods, (the Gods being incorporeal, and needing no " facrifices) but as fymbols and reprefentations of the "divine prefence, and as means and instruments by "which we pay our adoration to them. That the " priefts be honoured equally, or above the civil magifrates, as being the domestics of heaven. And " that the Priefts themselves should not read such au-" thors as Archilocus and Hipponax, but should imitate " Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Chrysippus, or Zeno, " but beware of the Epicurean and Pyrrhonian opinions; "that they give themselves to philosophic thoughts, " and to the duties of their office; be feldom feen in "the Forum, or about houses of great men, and should be chosen out of the best of men. The neglect of these things, says be, will give opportunity to the "Galileans, by their fingular humanity and charity, to establish their pernicious party, and pervert the honest-minded Gentiles to their Impiety." Thus he fought to reform paganism, and to bring it as near as might be to the admirable methods, by which he perceived Christianity had prevailed in the world. In imitation whereof he defigned and endeavoured to introduce schools for the education of youth in every city †; Churches and altars of different degrees and privileges, Lectures both of moral and speculative divinity, stated times and forms of alternate Prayer, the use of anathematism and penance, monasteries for devout and philofophic persons of either sex, alms-houses and hospitals Dd 2 ^{} Juliani fragmentum, operum pag. 288, & feqq. & epistola 49. operum pag. 429. + Nazianz. Orat. 1. in Julianum. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 16.

404 Means Julian used to restore Paganism, for the poor and criple, and reception of strangers; and what he most admired, commendatory ecclesiastic epistles or letters testimonial from the governours of the Church, whereby persons travelling from one country to another, were, upon producing these letters, sure to meet with a kind entertainment. All which he commends in his letter to Arsacius *. Secondly, He took all occasions of exposing Christians and their religion to ridicule. He was a man of a farcaffic wit, and he principally turned it that way. He read the scriptures for no other end but to censure them. If he met with a feeming contradiction, he made it real; if with an hyperbolical expression, he improved it to blasphemy. He derided the simplicity of the Apostles and Prophets, whom he represented as ignorant and illiterate fellows. In his Persian expedition, he wrote feven books against Christianity, which were afterward folidly answer'd by Cyril of Alexandria. When he spoke at any time of our Saviour, he would give him no other title than the fon of Mary, or the Galilean; and by a particular law ordered the followers of our Lord not to be called Christians, but Galileans +. The imperial standard of the Cross, which his uncle Constantine the Great had made with fo pious an intention, he took down, and in room thereof, put up another. In his own pictures and statues he represented Jupiter near him, coming down from heaven, and delivering to him the crown and the purple, the imperial enfigns ‡, and Mars and Mercury admiring him for his skill in war. His defign in this was, that when his officers paid their respect to the imperial statue, they might at the same time worship idols, or that he might have the better occasion to punish their pretended contempt. His prime Ministers walked after his example: His uncle Julian entering a Christian Church at Antioch, piffed against the communion-table; and when Euzorus reproved him for fo doing, he gave him a box on the ear. His Collegue Felix taking up the + Sozomen. Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 17.

^{*} Juliani Epist. 49. operum pag. 429. & apud Sozom. ubi supra-† Nazian. Orat. 1. in Julianum, oper. pag. m. 605.

rich plate, which the Emperors Constantine and Constantius had bestowed upon the Church, said, In what brave cups and vessels the Son of Mary is served? But divine justice soon overtook these miscreants; Julian's bowels rotted within him, and his excrements slowed out at his prosane mouth. His lady before his death brought him to such a sense of his sin, as he petitioned the Emperor in behalf of the Christians. As to Felix, his blood came out of his mouth, and in a day's time he vomited up his blood and his soul together, as is declared by Theodoret ||.

Thirdly, He fought by all means to bring Christians low, and to weaken and destroy their power and interest: he banished them out of all places of honour and authority; he obliged them either to do facrifice, or to quit their imployment, and be incapable of civil offices *. Thus Valentinian, who was afterward Emperor, threw up his office as Colonel of one part of the guards of the palace, and submitted to banishment, rather than yield to idolatrous compliance. This Emperor ordered that no Christian should be a magistrate, nor capable to write testaments, nor transfer an inheritance +. He exacted unreasonable sums of money of them upon all occasions, that being impoverished, they might either lie under a strong temptation to Apostacy, or be secured from attempting any thing against the state. Thus when the Arians at Edella had fallen foul upon the Valentinian Heretics, he feized the treasures of that Church, which he bestowed upon his foldiers, and the landshe appropriated, and mocking them faid t, He would ease them of their burden, that they might go lighter to the kingdom of heaven: but, fays he, if they provoke our humanity, by fighting and fedition, let them be punished for their insidence with fword, banishment and fire. Under pretence of his defigned war against the Persians, he heaped up treasures, imposing a heavy pecuniary mulct upon the heads of all those who refused to sacrifice to the Gods. The edict was executed with great feverity. He fet Christians upon quarrelling one with another, that they might do his work Dd 3

[#] Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 12, 13. * Sozom. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 18. † Juliani Epistola 43. operum pag. 424. ‡ Ibid. & Epistola 52.

406 Means Julian used to restore Paganism,

with their own hands. He understood the animosities between the Arians and the Orthodox, and studied to improve them to his own purpose. To this end, as soon as he came to the throne |, he recalled the banished Bifhops, and allowed them to return to their charges, posfeffed by those who he knew would not easily part with them. To gain himself the reputation of a wise and merciful Prince, he sent for the Bishops and their people to court, and pressed them to concord, that every one might peaceably enjoy the freedom of their own way. But his defign was to increase their diffensions, that they might be capable of joining in any defign, as even his own Historian Ammianus Marcellinus, a heathen, confesseth; adding *, That he found no wild heasts so outrageous to mankind, as some Christians to one another.

Fourthly, Tho' he himself abstained from open persecution, yet he connived at those who did persecute the Christians. He glories often bow kind be had been to these Galileans +, beyond what they had met with from his predecessors. Instead of banishment, they had been sent home; instead of a prison, they enjoyed liberty; instead of being plundered, their confiscated goods had been restored to them by edicts. He observed that the Christians gloried in martyrdom, and crouded to it as bees to their hives; he would not then gratify them with that honour. But tho' no public warrants were iffued, he left his officers to use their discretion in those places that were far from court. They understood their master's mind, and were not backward to use their authority and power. Several examples of this are upon record in Theodoret's Church-History ‡. They killed Cyril, a Deacon, who had broke fome heathenish image in the Emperor Constantine's Reign, and after putting him to death, they eat of his liver. They acted a terrible tragedy on the person of Marcus Arethufius, a grave man, who had overturned a heathen temple, and destroyed images in that reign. He yielding himself to their bloody hands, they torment his body, body, cast him into a stinking privy, hang him up in a basket greased with honey, that the wasps and slies might torment him in the hot sun: yet he would not yield to any of their proposals, but gloried in his sufferings ||. Capitolinus Governour of Thrace caused Æmilian to be burnt. Artemius, an officer of Egystian Soldiers, because in Constantine's Reign he had broke images, not only had his goods confiscated, but was also beheaded. Publia a noble woman, for singing, The idols of the nations are solver and gold, the work of mens hands, was cruelly beaten. Yea, not only content to abuse the living, their rage extended to the dead. Among others they digged up the bones of John the Baptist, buried at Samasia, called also Sebasta, and having mixed them with the bones of beasts, burnt them to ashes, and then scattered the ashes before the wind *.

[[] Sozomen. Hift. lib. 5. cap. 5. * Amm. Marcel. lib. 22. p. m. 564. † Jul. Epift. 7. operum pag. 376. Epift. 52. pag. 436. † Libro 3. cap. 6, 7, 16, 17, 18, 19.

Fiftbly, He endeavoured especially to weary out and discourage the Bishops and Clergy with bad usage. Julian pretended +, the reason why he did so was, lest they should stir up the people to sedition. But it was rather to be rid of them, that by their absence, the people, being destitute of the Word and Sacraments, might be brought into ignorance and unconcernedness about religion, and capable to receive any impression. Take away the candle, darkness will follow. If the shepherd be smitten, the sheep will be scattered. To compais this more effectually, he feized their incomes #, took away their allowances of corn, repealed the laws in their favour, and made them liable to bear burdens in civil courts. When all this would not do, he removed them by fraud or force. Thus Athanasius being brought home to Alexandria, after the death of the Emperor Constantius, was obliged by Julian to leave it again. He had a particular spleen at this honest man, as appears by his letter to Edicins Governour of Egypt, which is yet extant, where he fays | | , Tho' yez write nothing of others, yet be fure you ought to write of Dd 4

^{||} Nazianz. Orat. 1. in Julian. p.m. 610, 611.

^{*} Theod. Hift. Eccl. lib. 3: cap. 6. Rufini Hift. Eccl. lib. 2. cap 28.

⁺ Sozom. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 15. Jul. Epist. 52. pag. 436.

[#] Soz. lib. 5. cap. 5. || Jul. Epist. 6. operum pag. 376.

408 Means Julian used to restore Paganism,

Athanasius, that enemy of the Gods, since you know our decrees against him. I swear by the great Serapis, that if before the Kalends of December, that enemy of the Gods Athanafius be not expelled, not only out of that city, but also out of all Egypt, you shall be adjudged to lose your troop, which is worth an hundred pound of gold. "Tis very uneasy to me, that by this man's industry, the Gods are contemned. I can bear nothing more to my pleasure, than that this wicked Athanasius is expelled out of all Egypt, who has had the confidence in my very reign, to allure some illustrious Greek Women (that is, Pagans) to battism. The like orders he gave to the people of Alexandria *. Athanafie's retired to shun the storm; but with undaunted courage faid to his dejected flock, 'Tis but a little cloud, that will soon pass away +. At Antioch the Churches were shut up, the plate and treasures seized into the exchequer, and the clergy forced to fly. So was it done at Cyzicum, where there was not the least shadow of fedition. At Bostra he threatned Fins the Bishop, that if any mutiny happened is, he would lay the blame upon him and the clergy. When Titus wrote an Apology to court, affuring that the clergy lived peaceably, the Emperor wrote back to the city, That their Bifhop bad made scurrilous reflections upon them, exporting them | to expel him as a calumniator. In thany other places the clergy were cast into prisons, and exposed to pains and corture.

Sixthly, He gave all manner of affiftance and encouragement to the Jews in contempt of the Christians; for he hated both. But when he found the Jews were like to be inftruments to promote his purpole, he called for them, spoke tenderly to them, pitied their miserable and afflicted state, released the tribute put upon them, defired the help of their prayers in his Persian Wars, and wrote to them a kind letter yet extant , in the end whereof he tells them, This is what you ought principally to attend, that when I have successfully managed my Persian ^{*} Jul. Epist. 26. operum pag. 398. + Sozom. lib. 5. cap. 15. + lbid. | Ibidem.

Juliani Epist. 25. pag. 396. Jul, fragmentumoperum, pag. 295.

Persian Expedition, and the bolycity Jerusalem, which you have so long and so earnestly desired to see inhabited, being rebuilt by my endeavours, I may dwell in it, and together with you, offer up our joint prayers to the supreme Being of the world. When the Jews told him the reason why they could not offer facrifices, was, That the law had fixed these to a particular place at Jerusalem, where their temple was ruined, and themselves banished; he commanded them immediately to repair the temple, retrieve the customs of their ancestors, and worship God according to the rites of their religion. This he did to allure them to his pagan superstition; or, if that failed, to evidence to the world that our Saviour was a false prophet, who had fo expresly foretold the final diffolution of that Church and State. The Jews were fo glad of these orders, that they began to triumph over the Christians, threatning to make them feel as terrible effects of their feverity, as ever they themselves did feel by the Romans. When the news came abroad of rebuilding the temple, contributions were made by all hands: the very women fold their ornaments and jewels to advance the work; what was wanting, the Emperor commanded to be furnished from his own treasury. Alypius of Antioch was overseer of the work; tradesmen were brought from all parts; all materials were made ready, and the work begun. C_{v-} ril, the Bishop of Jerusalem, minding Daniel's prophecy, and that of our Lord, told them, That even now the time was come, that not one stone should be left upon another. The event justified his prediction; for when the builders had cleared the ground, a fudden ftorm arose, that carried away these vast heaps of rubbish, with a great quantity of lime and fand prepared for the work. This was followed with a dreadful earthquake, which cast up stones from the foundation, and overturned fome adjoining houses. Several persons were killed, and others drawn out with broken legs and arms, almost bruised to death. When they attempted again to build, a fire rushed out upon them, that destroyed many, and scorched the rest. These miraculous interposals of providence brought over some Jews, who were baptized and admitted as members of the Christian Church:

410 Means Julian used to restore Paganism,

Church: but the greater part continued in unbelief; $\mathcal{J}u^2$ lian, like Pharaob, hardened his heart. This is attefted by the ecclefiaftic hiftorians*, and the fubstance of it is confirmed by the testimony of Ammianus Marcellinus a heathen †. Sozomen in particular, after rehearling the fact, fays ‡, If these things appear incredible to any, we are affured of them by those who heard it from such as were eye-wilnesses, and are yet alive, and is confirmed both by Jews and Heathens, who left this work imperfect, being scarce well able to begin it. I know M. Basnage a late author feems to question the truth of these miracles, or sufpend his belief , because the ecclesiastic historians give a different account of some circumstances in the affair. But in my humble opinion, the fame learned author confirms the miracle from the Jewish Historians. "R. David "Gantz affirms the temple was not built because of the sudden death of Julian, but R. Gheduliah Scalschelet Hakkabala afferts, that this temple, rebuilt at a great " expence, fell down; and that the next day a great fire " from heaven melted the tools that remained, and de-" stroyed an innumerable multitude of Yews. This con-" fession of the Rabbins is the more considerable, because " it is affrontive to the nation, and these Gentlemen are " not wont to copy the books of Christians."

Upon the whole, I fee no reason to doubt the truth of this miracle, which is fo fully, as to the bulk of it, confirmed by Christian, Heathen, and Fewish historians; and very good authors may differ as to the circumstances of a real fact. I have been the longer upon this paffage, because it plainly proves, that what Julian defigned to suppress Christianity, became a mean to advance it.

Seventhly, He endeavoured to suppress and extinguish all human learning among the Christians, well knowing how naturally ignorance opens a door to contempt, barbarism and impicty. Julian himself in one of his letters says , Homer, Hesiod, Herodotus, Thucydides, ^{*} Socrates, Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 20. Theodoret. lib. 3. cap. 20. Soz. lib. 5. cap. 22. † Ammian. Marcel. lib. 23. ab initio. ‡ Loca citato. | Bathage History of the Jews, Book 6. Chap. 14. pag. m. 540, 547. * Epid. 42. operum pag. 423.

Hocrates, Lysias, were instructed by the Gods, and own themselves sacred to Mercury and the Muses; wherefore 'tis absurd that those who expound such books should reproach the Gods which these authors worshipped .-- If they conceive these authors had wrong opinions concerning the gods, let them go to the Churches of the Galileans, and interpret Matthew and Luke. Tho' he was a great Emperor, yet he humbled himself so far, as to be at pains to rifle and ruin the libraries of Christian bishops; for in his letter to Ecdicius, Governour of Egypt, he speaks thus : Some delight in horses, some in birds, others in wild beasts; but I from my infancy take pleasure in books .-- Wherefore do me this favour, as to bring me all the books of George of Alexandria. He has many curious things in philosophy, in rhetoric, and concerning the impious dostrine of the Galileans, which I would have utterly extinguished: But lest the rest perish with them, seek out the whole; and make George's own library-keeper affift you. If he be faithful in doing this, I will reward him; if not, I will enquire into it. I knew George's books, when I was in Cappadocia, he gave me some of them to copy, which I afterward returned to him. In another letter to Porphyrius +, Julian orders him to fend all that library to Antioch under the highest penalty, to take an oath of George's servants, that they had fequestred none of the books, and by force to compel them to produce them. To effectuate this design of extirpating human learning among Christians, he emitted the following law t, Professors of any art or science should excel in eloquence and good manners; and because I cannot be present in every city, I command that no teacher shall set up in any place, till by long exercise he is fitted for it, and after mature deliberation be found deferving of it by the court of the city; and that their decree be fent to me (that is, to the Emperor) for approbation. Theodoret tells us ||, that he discharged the children of Galileans from being taught poefy, rhetoric and philosophy: For, faid he, we are killed by our own arrows; they take weapons out of our own books, whereby they fight against ^{} Epist. 9. operum pag. 377. ‡ Codex Theod. lib. 13. tit. 13. l. 5. | Hist. Eccl. 1.3. cap. 8.

412 Means Julian used to restore Paganism, us. This decree is called by Ammianus Marcellinus, a Heathen, a cruel edict, worthy to be covered with eternal filence +. He also endeavoured to casheer them out of the army. By these methods he designed to introduce rudeness and ignorance among the Christians, and thereby to dispose them to any impressions he might make upon them, that they might not be able to encounter the Heathen: But he could not hinder them from speaking truth, which is mighty, and will prevail.

Eighthly, Above all men he highly honoured and rewarded philosophers, and those who were most likely to refute Christianity. It grieved him to see so many excellent books writ in defence and explication of our religion. He wished the writings of these Galileans were banished out of the world #. He encouraged the sophists, philosophers and orators by pensions and privileges to write against them. He brought the most eminent of that tribe to court, as Jamblichus, Libanius, Maximus, Ecebolius, Oribasius, Ædesius, Chrysanthius, and others, whose lives are described by Eunapius ||, an author who frequently shews his spleen against the Christians, especially in the lives of Adefius and Maximus, and in some other places of his book. Any body who reads Julian's letters to these philosophers, yet extant among his works, may see with what fondness of affection he writes to them, as his dear comrades, whom he would put all in his bosom. The truth is, if wit, learning or eloquence could have done it, he had driven our Religion out of the world. But the foolishness of God is wifer than men. Divine wifdom made foolish the wifdom of this world, and broke all his meafures.

Nintbly, He used the most popular arguments he could think of, to persuade the world to return to Paganism. We may have a taste of these from his letter to the people of Alexandria, where he tells them , "Tho" you had another founder of your city than "Alexander, I could have expected that those who have ⁺ Lib. 22. pag. m. 571. Inclemens, obruendum perenni silentio.

‡ Epist. 60. operum pag. 446. & Epist. 9. || De vitis Philosoph.

 Jul. Epist. 51. operum pag. 432.

" transgressed the laws, and introduced new doctrines and opinions (meaning the Christians) should be pu-" nished. Will you then make any requests for Atha-" nasius? when Alexander built your city, and Serais jis is your tutelar God, with Isis Queen of Egypt, a maid who assists him.——I swear by the Gods, I " am ashamed of you, people of Alexandria, that any among you should own himself a Galilean. The fa-thers of the Hebrews did serve the Egyptians, but you, who have conquer'd Egypt, (for your founder Alexan-der conquer'd it) how do you debase your selves to ferve those who contemn the ancient opinions of your " fathers? unmindful of the ancient happiness of your country, when the world had communion with the Gods of Egypt, and you lived in great abundance of " all things. But those who have brought in this new " religion, what good can they do to your city? Your " founder Alexander the Macedonian was religious toward " the Gods: fo was Ptolemy the fon of Lagus, who pro-"tected this city. Did it grow by the preaching of Jefus, or by the hateful doctrine of the Galileans? When we the Romans took this city from the Ptolemys,  Augustus came to it, and speaking to your citizens, faid, I pardon you all your faults, for the respect I bear to the great God Serapis, to this people, and great city.

To all which I may add, says Julian, the proofs you " have of my kindness. Have you no sense of that 66 bright fun that shines upon you, that makes summer " and winter, grass and plants to grow? And of the moon that affords great advantages to your city? 66 Dare you worship none of these Gods, but only " must believe in Jesus, whom neither you not your fathers knew?" These were the strongest arguments he could adduce for Paganism; but they were too weak to perfuade a Christian People to renounce the service of the glorious God, who made fun, moon and ftars, to whom we are reconciled through Jesus our blessed Redeemer, and to embrace the worship of dumb idols, to ferve devils to their own eternal destruction.

414 Means Julian used to restore Paganism.

Finally, He tried all fubtle arts to infnare unwary Christians to comply with Pagan superstition, to raise horror in their conscience, or to undermine their reputation. To this end, he used to place the images of the Heathen Gods next to or behind his own, that when the people came, according to custom, to do obeisance to the one, they might do it to the other . Those who did it, he persuaded to venture a little further. Those who discovered the cheat and refused, he charged with treason, and proceeded against them as delinquents. When the foldiers came at folemn times to receive their donatives, the ancient use was to throw a piece of frankincense into the fire, in honour to the Gods: which tho' the Christians detested, yet some surprized by an inveterate custom, did it; who being minded afterward of what they had done, horror feized their consciences; they went to the Emperor, and threw back their donatives, publickly professing themselves Christians, and desiring they might die, to give testimony to their religion. But he would not grant fuch the honour of martyrdom, only he expelled them from the palace and the army. At other times he used to defile the fountains and springs with heathen facrifices, and sprinkle all the flesh and food in the market + with hallowed water offered to his Gods, that fo the Christians could neither eat nor drink, but they must seem at least to be partners in idolatry. The Christians resented this with just indignation. Juventius and Maximus, two officers of the imperial guards, express'd to the Emperor's face a just dislike of his actions and of his Apostacy. These are the things, said they, which we lament and complain of at home, and now in your presence as the great blemishes of your reign. We were educated in true piety under those excellent Princes Constantine and his Sons, and cannot but now be uneasy, when we see all places full of abomination, and our very meat polluted with filthy facrifices. Julian, notwithstanding his gravity and philosophic composure, was so nettled with this answer, that he commanded them to be first miserably tortured, and then ^{} Sozomen. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 17.

⁺ Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 15.

The Emperor Julian's Life.

then put to death; tho' he would not have it thought they fuffered as martyrs for religion, but for their petulant carriage to himfelf.

Seven or eight months Julian staid at Constantinople, using these methods to suppress Christianity, and restore Paganism. Having settled his secular affairs, he crossed the Hellespont, and came to Pessinus, a city of Galatia , where stood an ancient temple dedicated to Rhea, or Ceres the Mother of the Heathen Deities; the worship whereof he restored, and published an elegant oration, the work of one night \dagger , to her praise. Thence he passed through Cilicia, and came to Antioch, July Anno 362 \pm . He found the city almost wholly Christian, and the Pagan Rites generally neglected. However he went into the fame 3 temple of Apollo in Daphne, upon its famous annual festival, where instead of great crouds and magnificent oblations which he expected, he found neither the one nor the other. He thought the people staid without, waiting his leave to come in: but the priest told him, There was no body attending, and that the city had provided no manner of sacrifice. He had only there one roor goofe, which he had brought from home to make an offering to the deity. For these things, the Emperor sharply expostulated with the senate, telling them, That they had but a penny for any public or private (acrifices; but they fuffered their wives to enrich the Galileans, and throw away their eftetes upon their poor. He intended to consult the oracle about the fuccess of his affairs ||. It was situate in a place called Daphne, in the fuburbs of Antioch, where was a delicate place, thick fet with cyprefs and other trees, which in the feafon afforded all manner of fruits and flowers, furnished with great variety of shady walks, joining their bushy heads, forbidding the approach of the fun to scorch those who recreated themselves there. It was watered with crystal fountains and rivulets; a cool wind playing through the trees added a natural harmony, ^{} Libanius in Juliani necem, pag. 254—300. † Juliani Oratio 5. in matrem Deorum, operum pag. 254—300. Juliani Misopogon, operum pag. 362.

Sozomen. Hift. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 19.

and dela htful murmur: it was the usual scene of the poets amorous fancies, and fuch a temptation to intemperance and riot, as it was counted feandalous for a good man to be there. Here was a stately temple built by Seleucus, father to Antiochui, who built Antioch, dedicated to Apollo Daphneus, who had a costly image within the temple, whence oracles were wont to be given. When Gallus, Julian's Brother, was created Cafar, he resided at Antioch, to secure the frontiers of the empire. He having a great veneration for the memory of Christian Martyrs, resolved to purge that place from the leud customs and pagan superstitions which had been there practised; which he thought he could not do more effectually, than by building a Church over against Apollo's Temple, into which, so soon as finished and dedicated, he caused St. Babylas's cossin to be translated. The devil it seems liked not fo near a neighbour, his prefence striking him dumb *. Julian finding the oracle did give him no answer, notwithstanding his costly facrifices, commanded the Christians to remove Babylas's Coffin; and thereupon a great number affembled, who brought it into the city in a folemn triumph, finging, Confounded be all they who worship graven images †. Thus did God give a testimony of the vanity of the Gentile Religion, and a reproof to the infidelity of the Emperor. Chrysostom fays t, Julian was afraid to offer any indignity to the martyr's ashes, lest some immediate judgment should come upon him, as on his uncle Julian and Felix the treasurer; of whom we have already heard II.

However, vexed with these hymns, he ordered Sallust the Presect to persecute the Christians, and many were apprehended and cast into prison. Among the rest one Theodorus a youth  was caught in the streets, and put on the rack, his sless torn with iron pincers, he was scourged and beaten. When no torture could shake his constancy, he was at length dismissed. Rushnus, who wrote the eccle-^{*} Chrysostom. de S. Babyla, pag. 676.

[†] Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 18. Theodoret. Hift. lib. 3. cap. 10. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 19. ‡ De S. Babyla. || See above pag. 405.  Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 18. Theodoret. lib. 3. cap. 11. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 20.

Chap.4. The Emperor Julian's Life.

4 F7

Ecclefiaftic history, afterwards asked this Theodorus, if in the midit of his tortures he felt any pain? He told him *, That at first he was a little schible; but that one, in shape of a young man, stood by him, who gently wiped off the fiveat from his face, refreshed him with cold water, and supported his spirit with consolctions, so as his sufferings were pleasant to him. Heaven shewed displeasure at the proceedings of the Emperor; for while he was doing thefe things, the temple of Apollo in Daphne took fire, which in a few hours burned the facred image, and reduced the temple, excepting the walls and pillers to ashes f. The Christians ascribe this to divine venceance to Gentiles impute it to the malice of the Christians +; tho' the priests and wardens of the temple being racked to make them fay fo, could not be brought to say any more than, That it was fired by a light from heaven. Libanius, in an elegant discourse, bewails the unhappy fate of this sumptuous building | : Chrysoftom makes witty remarks upon it.

Julian's spleen was further raised against the people of Antioch upon this occasion; he had brought a train with him, enough to raise a scarcity, yet he cried down the price of all commodities below what they could be afforded at. The traders brought nothing into the markets, and a real samine ensued. This made the people mutiny, and according to the humour of the place they lampoon'd the Emperor with satyrical reflections, playing upon his long rough beard like a goat, that it was good for nothing but to make ropes of . He at first vowed revenge, but in the mean time only repaid them with a tart satyr, called Misopogon ++, or, the Beard-bater; where he exposes the luxury, intemperance, and other vices of that people, That they were over-fond of X and K, ^{*} Socrat. lib. 3. cap. 18. Theodoret. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 10. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 19. † Ibidem.

[‡] A. Marcellinus, lib. 22. pag. m. 573. Suspicabatur enim id Christianos egisse stimulatos invidia.

Monodia supra Apollinis fanum igni exustum.

^{} Socrat. ib 3. cap. 17. Sozomen. lib. 5. cap. 19. ++ Extat in oper. Juliani, pag. 337 — 371. Edit. 1696.

Vol. I. Ee

418

418 The Emperor Julian's Life.
Chi and Kappa, that is Christ and Constantine, and that their ill-ordered magistracy neglected the common-wealth.

Julian in his progress through the East, staid some time at Cæfarea, a populous city, where many Christians inhabited; who being zealous for their religion, had pulled down the temples of Jupiter and Apollo, and had lately destroyed the temple of Fortune dedicated to the public genius of the city *. This put him in a rage, fo as to lose all his patience; he was displeased with the Gentiles of the place, that tho' few in number, they had not ventured their lives and fortunes in defence of these temples. What matter, said he, tho' one Gentile had dispatched half a score of Galileans +? He took away the charter of the city, reducing it to a village, not allowing it to bear the name of Cafar; he feized on the revenues of the Church, both within and without the city, forcing the Christians by racks and torments to make a discovery, and commanded the sum of 300 pounds in gold, that is in our account 10800 l. Sterl. to be immediately paid to his exchequer, the clergy to be entred on the muster-roll, to serve as Militia under the governour of the province, and the common people to be put under tribute; swearing after all, That unless these temples were immediately built, he would utterly destroy the place, and not suffer a Galilean to wear a head on his shoulders. Perhaps he had been as good as his word, had not death happily taken him off, at least Basil had run the hazard of going to the stake. Nazianzen expresly says, They two had the honour of the Cyclops, to be reserved last to punishment, that upon Julian's triumphant return from Perfia, they might fall a victim to his deities ‡. While he lay at Cafarea, he fent parties up and down the country to eject Bishops, and take possession of their Churches; one part of them came to Nazianzum, where the commander peremptorily required the Church, that the elder Gregory had not long before built, to be delivered to him: but the good old man stoutly opposed him, daily affem-⁺ Nazianz. in Julian. Orat. 1. pag. m. 612. # Nazianz. pag. m. 651. Orat. 2. in Julian.

^{*} Sozomen. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 4.

Chap.4. The Emperor Julian's Life. 419 bling the people to public prayers; and in the iffue the officer, for his own fafety, was fain to retire, and furcease his command.

Julian departed from Antioch with his army in the beginning of March. At his going he let the people know how much he resented the affronts done him, and by a fatal prognoftication faid he should see them no more. Libavius, to reproach them, asked a Christian Schoolmaster *, What the carpenter's son was now doing? thus deriding our Saviour. The man replied, The God who made the world, whom you mock, is making a coffin for your master Julian. The Emperor marched on to Edessa, but would not enter the city, because it was all inhabited by Christians. He came to Carræ a city in Mesopotamia, April 18. where he entred the Pagan Temple, and performed many fecret execrable rites; which being finished, he fealed up the doors, and fet a guard on them, giving orders that none should open them till his return. When they were broke open upon the news of his death, there was found a woman hanging by the hair of the head, her hands extended, and her belly ript up, that a prefage of fuccess might be had by inspecting her liver +. The like feems to have been done at Antioch, where many chests were found in the palace filled with dead mens skulls, and feveral dead bodies hid in the wells; which were no doubt the engines and monuments of his diabolic divination.

In the middle of fummer, he came within fight of the Perfian Army, and had a hopeful prospect of victory; when venturing too far, without his armour, he was on a fudden struck with a horseman's lance t, which grazing on his arm, passed in at his side, and went to the lower lap of the liver. The lance being two-edged, he cut his fingers while he strove to pull it out; and fainting with the loss of blood and spirits, he sunk down on his horse's neck. 'Tis reported by Theodoret |, That Julian finding himfelf He 2

^{*} Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 23.

⁺ Theodoret. Hilt. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 26, 27,

[#] A. Marcellinus, lib. 25. Fag. m. 601, Hist. Eccl. lib. 3, cap. 25.

felf mortally wounded, took a handful of his blood, and throwing it up into the air, cried, Thou half overcome, O Galilean! Somman fays *, He threw up his blood into the air, as I king to Christ, and accusing him as author of his dath. His wounds being found dangerous, he was laid on a targ t, and carried into his tent, where he died about midnight, June 26. A.D. 363, in the 32d year of his age, when he had not reigned full two years. Lihaving out ht not to have reproached the Christians as killing him by treachery +, which calumny Sozomen refut st. Even Ammianus Murcellinus, a Pagan, who was present at the fight, says | 'tis uncertain who did it; and Entropius another Pagan, and at that time also in the bettle, fays, Hollili manu interfectus oft , he was killed by the hand of an enemy. He was a Prince superstitious rather than religious, of a nimble fatyrical wit, loved to talk much, affected to be flattered, was skilled in profane learning, diligent in his studies, so as when he had imployed the day in business, he would spend the night in reading and writing. He defended Paganifm, with his fword and with his pen. To give him his due, had not his memory been stained with Apostacy from the best religion that ever was, and with an implacable hatred to the Christians, he had been one of the best Princes that ever managed the Roman Empire. Even Eutropius fays ++, He was too great a persecutor of the Christian Religion, yet fo as to abstain from blood: which last part is not altogether true. In the good providence of God, his death restored health and fafety to the Christian World. Had he returned victorious from the Persian expedition, the Chriftians might have felt the utmost effects of his severity, for it was what he threatned; and if he had prolonged his reign many years, he might have reduced Christianity to a very low ebb in all human appearance. 'Tis no wonder then if Christians entertained the news of his death with triumph and joy; their Churches were filled with hymns

^{*} Hift. Eccl. lib. 6.cap. 2.

^{*} Hitt. Ecct. no. o.cap. ...

† Libanius in Juliani necem, pag. 324.

* Eutrop. lib. 10. $, penult.

⁺⁺ Ioid. Nimius Christiana Religionis insectator, perinde tamen ut ernore abstineret.

Chap.4. The Life of the Emperor Jovian. 424 hymns and thanksgivings, and their houses with great feasts and rejoicings. At Antioch the people insulted Maximus the philosopher and magician, who had blown up Julian in his folly and cruelty, crying out, What is now become, O thou soolish Maximus, of all thy oracles and divinations? God and his Christ have overcome *.

Upon Julian's death, Jovian was by the suffrage of the army saluted Emperor. Fie was Primicerius of the domestical protectors, or Captain-General of the imperial guard, a resolute Christian. For when Julian published an edict †, That the army should either facrifice, or disband, he offered to lay down his commission: but the Emperor knowing him to be a person too valuable to be easily parted with, ordered him to continue his command.

Upon the acclamations of the foldiers faluting Jovian Emperor, he told them, That for his part he was a Christian, and could not take upon him the command of an army, trained up in the principles of the deceas'd Emperor; he could not expect the divine protection, or any success by their arms. To this they almost unanimously replied $, You shall reign over Christians; the eldest of us were trained up under the discipline of Constantine, those that are next in order, under the instructions of Constantius; as for the late Emperor, his reign was so short, it could not make any deep impressions upon the minds of men. On this assurance he took the government upon him, and made peace with the Perfians on the best terms his circumstances could afford. Eutropius says ||, It was a necessary, but dishoneurab e peare, having delivered up some part of the empire, which no man ever did for III8 Years before; that is, from the building of Rome or foundation of that monarchy. But I am concerned now to account for the Propagation of Christianity, and Overthrow of Paganism, not the affairs of the empire, which by Julian's unwary expe-E e 3

^{*} Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 27, 28. + Socrat. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 22.

[‡] Theodoret, Hist. lib. 4. cap. 1. Socrat, Hist. lib. 3. cap. 22.

dition against Persia, were put into consusion, and this peace made necessary.

Indeed the grief of the Pagans for the death of Julian, was doubled by the election of Jovian, whose zeal for Christianity they were too well assured of; and therefore in all places they traduced him with lampoons and fatyrs *. He began his reign with the care of religion, and wrote immediately to the governours of the provinces over the empire, to open the Churches, and diligently attend the folemnities of divine worship, and let his subjects know, that the Christian Religion was the only way of falvation. He reflored to the feveral Churches the gifts and revenues, and to the clergy their privileges and immunities which Julian had taken from them †; particularly he restored the yearly allowance of corn which Constantine the Great had settled upon the Church; but because a dearth and scarcity then raged, he was obliged to cut off two thirds of deat allowance, promifing to reftore it as foon as the famine was over #. He also recalled all the Bishops and other ecclesiastic persons who had been banished for their religion, and particularly Atha-. nafius ||. He supported the Homo-sufian or Orthodox Faith, and ordered the canons of the council of Nice to be obferved , the pagan temples to be shut up, and the public facrifices to be taken away; whereupon the priefts crept into corners, and the very philosophers were fo frighted, that they laid afide the Palium, and wore the common habit ††; yet he kindly entertained the philofophers wherever he came; and by an edict gave every man leave to ferve God in his own way ##, which is to be understood not of the public, but of the private exercise of religion. The Gentiles were now under the hatches, and all their cry is for gentleness and moderation, leaving men to the liberty of their confeience || ||: but this would not pass with them; when they had the upper-

^{*} Suidas in voce 10212vos. 7 Theodoret.Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 4. ‡ Theod. ubs supra. | Theod. lib. 4. cap. 2.

^{} Socrates, Hist. lib. 3. cap. 24.

^{±±} Themistus, Orat. 12. pag. 278

III Libanius de templis, & in Juliani necem, pag.290.

Chap.4. The Death of the Emperor Jovian. 423 hand, then they tempted the Christians to Aposlacy by barbarous severities. The Emperor also emitted a * Law, whereby it was made a capital crime to ravish the consecrated virgins, or to attempt to marry them. This seems to have been occasioned by the looseness of the late times, when many of these virgins had been seduced to such leud practices. This law bears date February 19. and the year of the consuls coincides with the 364th of the Christian Æra.

This good Emperor died soon after, in his return from Antioch to Constantinople, at Dadastana a village in the confines of Galatia and Bithynia, having supped on poisonous mushrooms, or being choaked with the smoak of coals, or the damp of a new-plaistered room †. However, he was found dead on his bed, after he had reigned not full eight months, in the 33d year of his age. He was a valuable Prince, whose reign, if it had been longer, would have probably rendred the condition both of Church and State very prosperous. Theodoret has this resection upon this event ‡, The great God shews us good things, and for our sins soon takes them away, to discover how great mercies he is ready to give, and how unworthy we are of them, that he may thus engage us to a better and more boly life.

The army marched to Nice, and there elected Valentinian Emperor. He was a tribune of the Salarii, a man of fpirit and courage, who had suffered for his religion under Julian. Upon this occasion, by virtue of his office he was bound to attend the Emperor, when he went to offer facrifice in the temple, where the priests stood ready at the door, with branches in their hands, to sprinkle holy water on those that entred in: some drops thereof fell on Valentinian, who struck the priest a box on the ear, in the Emperor's presence, counting himself polluted, not purged by that lustration, and tearing off that part of his garment, upon which the water had E e 4

^{*} Codex Theodossi, lib. 9. tit. 25. l. 2.

⁺ Sozomen, lib. 6. cap. 6. Socrates, lib. 3. cap. ult.

⁺ Hift. Eccl. lib.4. cap.4.

424 Propagation of Christianity. Cent. IV.

fallen, threw it away. Julian raged to see his Religion affronted, yet not willing to give Valentinian the honour of martyrdom, found another fault with him, and banished him to Melitena, a defolate town in Armenia. This is attested by the ecclesiastic historians who wrote bout that time*. He returned in the beginning of Jois reign. Upon his election, messengers were imme matriy dispatched to Ancyra, to carry him the welcome n we had conduct him to Nice, where the foldiers proclaimed him Emperor; withat requiring that he would take a partier into the Empire. He answered, It was in you jower, gentleme, to make me Emperor; but being f, it s my fart to command. However, within a month he affamed his brother Valen: to be his Collegae: Wach, fays Thuderet +, I wish he had not de; but bis errors in dollring we e not then known. To hes brother he alletted Afia and Egypt, referving the Empire in Europe to him! If. To make their Governmen, acceptable in the beginning thereof, they emitted a general toleration, enacting $\dagger$, That every one might worship God a coolding to the rie of that Leligion wherein they buil been educated, and that no man shald be comgelied to this or that way of worthip, but all left to a free and unconfinained choice; and that divination by facrifices flould not be bindred. They are fufficiently cried up by pagan writers, for this ||: But the Christians complain. , that under Valens, in the East, the Bacchanaha, and Feafts of Ceres were openly kept, the priefts running like mad-men through the country, and that he was only an Enemy to the orthodox observers of the apostolic doctrine. Indeed Valens supported the Arian party, and oppressed the afferters of the orthodox doctrine of the council of Nice; but to explain this, is not my prefent bufincis.

This general toleration to both Christians and Pagans, the Emperors by degrees began to restrain, with respect to ^{*} Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 1. Sozom. lib. 6. cap. 6. Theodoret. lib. 3. cap. 16. lib. 4. cap. 5.

† Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 5.

† Cod. Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 5.

† Cod. Theodoret. lib. 4. cap. 5.

† Am. Marcellinus, lib. 30. pag. m. 665.

Symmachus, lib. 10. cpitt. 54.

 Theod. Hist. lib. 4. cap. 24.

made

to the latter. For by a law published in the first year of their reign *, they seized the farms and revenues belonging to the heathen temples. They had been taken away by Constantine and his sons, but restored by Julian, and were now annexed to the Emperor's private patrimony. By another law, they prohibit night facristices †, charms and magic divinations, and ordered, that every person convicted thereof should be punished. They took care, that no Christian, under any pretence whatsoever ‡ should be condemned to the gladiatory sports, as dishonourable to the Christian name. Whereas the Gentiles were now sain to guard their temples by soldiers to prevent their being insulted, the Emperors ordered, That no judge or officers should command Christians upon that service ||, under pain of losing life and estate. These laws are directed to Symmachus the Provost of Rome, and are judged to bear date A. D. 365.

By these proceedings pagan superstition declined apace; but they used all the arts they could, to keep up the Spirits of their finking party: they improved the public toleration as far as possible; and since Valens heartily espoused and spent the strength of his severity against the Catholics, that is, the supporters of the doctrine of the council of Nice, in opposition to Asis, the Pagans grew every day more bold and impudent, till he was forced to make it capital for any, either in public or private, by night or by day, to exercise any art of divination, or confult them that did fo. The occasion of the law was thus: The most eminent pagan philosophers at that time were grieved at the slourishing state of Christianity, and propagation thereof: they grew weary of Valens's government, and longed for an Emperor of their own Religion ; they fecretly confederated with fome great persons at court, and officers of the army, and tried by methods of divination who was like to fucceed him in the Empire. To this end a wooden Tripos,

^{} Sozomen. Hist. Eccl. lib. 6. cap. 35. Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 19. Amm. Marcellinus, lib. 29. pag. m. 645. & fequencibus, made of Laurel, was prepared and confecrated with magic charms, and placed in the middle of a room perfumed with Arabian spices: the charger on which it was fet, had on the brim the twenty four letters of the alphabet; a person came in cloathed in linen, and shaked a magical ring hanging on a curtain about the end of the charger; the letters which the ring presented or pointed out, were @EOA, whereupon those who stood by, said the oracle intended Theodorus, a learned man of quality, but a pagan, whom they defired to be advanced to the Empire. The whole affair being discovered to the Emperor, he, in astonishment and passion, ordered strict inquiry to be made into it. Theodorus was beheaded, the maker of the Tripos burnt alive, and the rest concerned in the confult were exquifitely tortured; whose tortures and fevere usage may be seen at large in Ammianus Marcellinus*. All pagan philosophers who came to hand, were fure to be executed. Valens the Emperor, who was always cruel, became in this case outrageous, a fringed cloak being then a sufficient evidence of a magician and conjurer. Maximus, Julian's master, a celebrated philosopher, (to whom the Emperor owed an old grudge, for an affront done him in Julian's time,) being now charged as privy to the plot, was carried to Ephefus, the place of his nativity, and there beheaded +. Above others, his fury was provoked against such whose names began with these four letters Θ , E, O, Δ , whether called Theodorus, Theodotus, Theodofius, Theodolus, or the like, these he caused to be put to death wherever they were found. Many changed their names, to avoid the danger. Yet God ordered the great Theodosius to escape the danger, and succeed in the empire, as an useful instrument to overthrow Paganism, and promote the good of the Christian Church. Valens also ordered books of magic, or any other curious and unlawful art, to be fearched for; which being piled upon heaps, were publickly burned. Ammianus Marcellinus fays ‡, To ^{*} Ibidem. † Eunapius de vitis Philosophorum, in vita Maximi, pag. m. 106. † Lib. 29. pag. m. 646.

so great terror then seized men, that many in the eastern trovinces did burn their libraries.

In the west Valentinian carried toward the pagans with a more easy hand. He granted * the provincial priests, who superintended a whole province, that they should be free from the burden of civil offices, and enjoy the same privileges with persons of quality, not to be racked or tortured, and to have the dignity conferred upon them as the reward of their care. The time when this law was enacted, appears by the date of the confuls, to coincide with June 27. A. D. 371. He also took care about the players, who acted at the public sports and theatres, a trade forbidden by the canons of the Church, that † in case of imminent danger of death, they might, upon their repentance and earnest desire, be admitted to the facraments, that is, to Baptism and the Eucharist, provided this was done by allowance of the prefidents of the Church, and inspection of the civil magistrate.

About the year 372, Mavia Queen of the Saracens, a people who then inhabited those parts of Arabia which lie next to Egypt, being at war with the Romans, and like to be very troublesome, an embassy was sent to her for peace; which she accepted, upon condition they would ordain and fend Moses, who lived a monastic life in the neighbourhood, a man famous for miracles and piety, as a bishop to her country. This being easily agreed to, Moses is sent for to Alexandria, where he refused to be ordained by Lucius, whom the Arians had thrust into that See, soon after the death of Athanasus, faying, His hands were polluted by the blood of the faints. He therefore betook himself to the catholic bishops who lived in exile, and having from their hands received ordination, he went to the Saracens country, the greater part whereof he converted to the profession of the Christian faith. This work was afterward carried on to greater perfection, when Zocomos, one of the heads of the principal tribes, was baptized, and brought over his people to the faith, after the birth of a Son, which a religious monk affared him he should have, if he would embrace Christianity. The ecclesiastic historians have all the substance of the story*, but Sozomen most fully. Christianity made a further progress among the nor-

^{*} Codex Theod. lib. 12. tit. 1. lib. 75.

Christianity made a further progress among the northern nations, especially with the Goths, who then dwelt upon the river Danow: for Phritegernus, one of their Princes, having by the affistance that Valens lent to him, gained a considerable victory against Athanaricus, another of the Princes, he, in gratitude to the Emperor, and as a firm mark of his friendship, entertained the Christian Religion among his people †. The Arians being at this time the only powerful faction at court, took this opportunity to introduce their own opinions among the Goths, tho' they had taken root there some time before, by means of Uphilas their Bishop, who was the first that is said to have found the Gothic letters, and translated the Bible into their language.

In the mean time, Valens miserably harassed the orthodox defenders of the doctrine of the council of Nice against the Arians, pursuing them with incredible violence. The mistius, a pagan philosopher, did plead their cause before the Emperor, saying ||, His Highness must not think much of the difference of opinions among Christians: it was very inconsiderable if compared with the multitude and consusion of opinions among the Gentiles, which were above 600. Perhaps God was delighted with such a variety of sentiments, since it tended to beget in the minds of men a greater reverence of the Divine Majosty, when they found the knowledge of these things so deep, as no human capacity could comprehend it. The Emperor was so far softned by this discourse, that he changed the punishment of men in sacred other from death to banishment.

Valentinian died in the West, November 17. A. D. 375. Tis said of him, that he was a Prince of great parts, but his anger was almost a madness; as appears by some of the last passages of his life. For the Sauromatæ having ^{*} Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 36. Theod. Hist. lib. 4. cap. 23. Rusin. lib. 2. cap. 6. Sozomen, lib. 6. cap 38.

[†] Sozomen.lib. 6. cap. 37. Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 33. || Apud Socratem in Hist. Eccl. lib. 4. cap. 32.

having made incursions into some parts of the Empire, and being informed of the preparations he made against them, they sent an embassy for peace *. He was surprised at the Embassadors mean appearance; but when he understood they were the most noble men which that nation could afford, he cried, The condition of the Romans was very unbappy, to be troubled with the rebelion of so unworthy a people; and did fall into such a rage, as the violence of his passion broke an artery in his body, of which he soon died, having reigned eleven years and some months. Valens survived scarce three years †, being defeated by the Goths. His men on their slight put him in a little cottage, to which the enemy set fire and burnt him, and those that were with him, in the 50th year of his age, and of our Lord 378. His reign for the most part was indulgent to the Pagans, and severe to Catholic Christians.

Upon the death of these two brothers, the government rested in the hands of the two sons of Valentinian: Gratian, who had already reigned twelve, and Valentinian junior, who had reigned three years, they being admitted when very young to bear the title of Emperors. Gratian being attacked by the Goths and Germans, and having little affittance from his brother, who was but about ten years of age, found himself obliged to take in a partner for the eaftern Empire. The person elected was Theodosius a Spaniard, son to an excellent officer of that name, whom Valens put to death in Africa, tho he had delivered him from the Tyranny of Firmus. He had already given great proofs of his conduct and valour. Every body approved the choice, and he was invested with the purple at Sirmich, in the 43d year of his age, A.D. 379.

The Gentiles had enjoyed the peaceable exercise of their Religion for a considerable time, having met with little or no interruption since the reign of Constantius, that is, for about the space of twenty years. The first two years of Theodosius's government being almost wholly taken up with wars, wherein he routed the Goths in Thracia, and other enemies to the Empire, the Pagans then had their temples open, and the freedom of their old rites and ceremonies, fo as many began to return to their old fuperstitions. Others meeting with cruel usage in the reign of Valens, when the perfecution against the orthodox was carried on by the joint concurrence of Arians, Jews and Gentiles, took shelter in their old Religion, in fo far as the Emperor found it necessary to restrain this wicked practice by a law, dated A.D. 381 *, That they who apostatized from Christianity to Paganism, should lose all power of making a Will, which was ever counted the great privilege of a Roman, fo as none of his friends could be the better for any thing he left behind him; which Theodofius and Valentinian II. explained and ratified by many subsequent acts, extending it to particular perfons and things +. About the end of the same year he prohibited ‡, under pain of proscription, all divinatory sacrifices, either by day or by night, and that none should approach the temples for any such purpose; adding, That God is to be worshipped with pure and chaste prayers, not with execrable charms and conjurations. The Christians improved these laws, so as temples both in city and country were affaulted; and Zosimus complains ||, That the Pagans were not able to lift up their eyes to the heavens, and pay their devotion to the planets, without danger of their heads. Among the rest there was a curious Pantheon richly adorned with abundance of statues and images of the Gods, in the province of Ofrobene at Edessa, that was shut up: but upon the Gentiles complaint at court, representing the city was thereby prejudiced, who were wont there to keep their public meetings and annual festivals, wherein they offered up prayers for the fafety of the life of the Emperor, it was granted that it should stand open for these uses, and the Images should remain by way of ornament.

^{*} Sozomen. lib. 6. cap. 36. + Ibid. cap. 40. Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 38. Amm, Marcel. lib. 31. pag. m. 678, 679.

^{*} Cod. Theod. lib. 16. tit. 7. l. 1. † Ibidem, lib. 2. 3, 4. || Zofimus, lib. 4. pag. 758.

Ch. 4. Valentinian II. and Theodosius. 431 ornament, but that no facrifices should be offered in it*.

In the West Gratian was zealous against the Pagans. He resuled the pontifical habit, and the title of Pontifex Maximus +, tho' that title is sometimes given him in ancient inscriptions. But he was soon after this murdered by the tyrant Maximus, who was afterward deseated by Theodosius, and his head cut off.

The following year Symmachus a Pagan was madeProvost of Rome. Soon after his election he framed an address to the Emperor, where, with all the subtilties of wit and eloquence, he did plead the cause of his religion before Valentinian II. befeeching him to restore their ancient rites, and particularly that the altar of victory, which was placed in the Capitol, as fome fay, or rather in the Senate-house, and being moveable, was carried wherever the fenate affembled, being taken away by the preceding Emperors, might be reftored; and that the falary formerly allowed the veftal virgins, who were feven in number, might be returned, and that it might be lawful for any to bestow what legacies they pleased upon them. This address was happily encountered, antwered and baffled by the eloquent and learned Ambrose bishop of Milan. The papers are too long to be here inferted, but may be feen in Ambro/e's works || and are handsomely englished by Dr. Cave ±.

The Pagans in the East, notwithstanding the laws to the contrary, could not be restrained from tampering with Aruspices, Augurs, Magicians, and the rest of that tribe; which obliged Theodosius to quicken the execution of the law, by making it capital for any person, either upon any present occurrence, or for knowing any suture event, to consult divinatory sacrifices . The rescript is directed to Cynegius the Pratorian Prafect in the East, to whom the Emperor committed the care of abolishing Paganism in those parts ††, and particularly in [‡] Life of Ambrose, pag. 375,——390.  Cod. Theod. lib. 16. tit. 10. l. 9.

⁺⁺ Zosimus, lib. 4. pag. 762.

Egypt, whither he fent him A. D. 387, impowering hime to shut up or demolish the Heathen Temples. Tho' Cynegius made some progress, yet he lest the main work imperfect, dying next year. But the design was carried on, and Theophilus bishop of Alexandria was very zealous for it.

There was at Alexandria an ancient and famous Temple dedicated to Serapis, whom some take to be the same with Pluto, and how this idol was brought to Alexandria at first, we have a more full account in Tacitus *; which Temple is described by Rusinus+, and other ecclesiastic historians ||, as one of the most rich and magnificent in the world. Eunapius a Pagan fays t, It was one of the finest in the universe, to which an innumerable multitude from all parts of the earth did resort. This Temple, Theophilus had begged of the Emperor, defigning to turn it to a Church. His defire being granted, workmen were employed to clear the rubbish, who found many dark vaults and cellars, the fecret receptacles of the hidden rites and mysteries of Paganism, out of which they brought many obscene and detestable Priapus's, and other abominable images, which they publickly exposed to the scorn and derision of the people. This provoked the Gentiles beyond measure, so as they gathered into a body; and tho' they were the leffer number, yet armed with rage and fury, they broke in upon the Christians, wounded many, killed others, and flying to the temple garrison'd themselves in it. They had taken some Christians prifoners, whom they forced to do facrifice, or upon their refusal put them to death with new and exquisite tortures. The party was headed by Olympius, a pretended philosopher. Several effays were made by the magistrates to bring them to reason, but in vain; nothing was heard out of the temple but a confused noise. The magistrates were forced to fend an account of what had happened to the Emperor, which frighted the Pagans, and made feveral.

De Vitis Philosophorum, pag. m. 72.

^{*} Taciti Annalium lib.4. cap. 83, 84.

⁺ Rufin. lib. 2. cap. 22, 23.

| Theodoret. lib. 5. cap. 22. cap. 16. Sozomen. lib. 7. cap. 15.

feveral of them run to lurking-places, as Helladius and Ammonius, by whom Socrates tays he was taught letters when very young *. Theodosius, according to the sweet-ness of his nature, reply'd, As for the Christians who had been killed in the scuffle, they were bappy, being crowned with martyrdom. As to their murderers, he resolved to pardon them, hoping that so much clemency might become an effectual argument for their conversion. But the temples which had been the occasion of this disorder, should be pulled down to the ground, and had directed Theophilus to fee his orders obeyed. The Christians entertained this letter with acclamations; the Gentiles dispersed. Then Theophilus, accompanied with Monks, assisted by the Augustal Prafett, and some of the Roman army, set about the execution of his orders. The temple they wholly demolished. In the walls they found hieroglyphics, which some Christians said were the sign of the cross, and others, that when these were found the temple would come to an end +. Many of the Pagans abandoned their idols, and embraced Christianity. Within the circumference of the great building, stood a chappel supported by rich marble pillars; the walls were overlaid with gold, and that defended by a cover of brafs. In this chappel stood the image of Serapis, so large, as with one hand he touched the one, and with another he covered the other fide of the temple, with many rich devices to delude the people. They had a tradition, that if any man did but touch the image, the earth would immediately open, the heavens be diffolved, and all things go to confusion. But a Christian foldier, not fearing the prediction, with a halbert cut down the jaws of the image, and found no other dreadful effects enfue than an army of mice, which did fly out at the breach. Then they cut him limb from limb, and burnt him in the streets of the city, and his trunk with folemnity in the amphitheatre. Eunapius laments the fate of this place, and says ||, The demolishing

^{*} Socrates, Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 16. +

De vitis Philosophorum, pag. m. 73, 75. + Ibid, cap, 17. Vor. I.

lishing thereof in the reign of Theodosius, was like what the fables report of the giants fighting against the Gods.— He blames the Monks, who counted it religion to destroy those holy places, saying, They appeared men, but lived like hogs. These resections shew the grief of the Pagans for the loss of their idols. The time was now come that the Prophet Isaiah speaks of $\|\|\], That a man shall cast his idols of silver and gold, which they made for themselves to worship, to the moles and to the batts, and the idols he shall utterly abolish.

The mother temple being thus out of the way, the rest followed more easily. The Pagan temples and images at Alexandria being overturned, the folly and impiety committed by the priefts about them was laid open. One instance thereof is remarkable. Tyrannus, a priest of the temple of Saturn, famous for giving oracles, had his temple frequented by persons of the best rank. When he had a mind to corrupt any of their wives, he would tell the husband, it was the pleasure of the Gods his wife should come and spend that night in devotions at the temple. The lady * being dreffed to advantage, and night being come, the doors were lock'd fast upon her; and while she was intent upon her devotions, the prieft by fecret conveyances crept into the old wormeaten image of Saturn, through which he fpake to her as if it had been the God himfelf: And having thus prepared her, by unfeen cords put out the lights, and then coming forth feized upon the affrighted lady, and drew her into leud embraces. This trade he had driven many years, till meeting with a chafte lady, who knew him by his voice, fhe abhorred the fact, and went home and complained of the villary to her husband, who discovered the fame. Tyrannus being convicted, confessed the crime, and received condign punishment. The whole scene of adulteries, incests and bastards being laid open, turned to the reproach of Paganism; and their temples with their idols were brought to a shameful end.

Thefe

Ch. 4. Valentinian II. and Theodosius.

435

These ruined temples were generally turned into churches. Out of that of Serapis was built on the one side a Martyrium *, and on the other side a church, called after the name of Arcadius. The Catholic Church did increase; many Heretics, and a multitude of Pagans sleeing to it a sdoves to their windows. It was not without danger to offer facrifices to the idols, even in private; laws being made, that those who adventured to do so, should be punished with death and confiscation of goods.

About this time it happened, that the river Nile did not over-flow so plentifully as it was wont to do. The Gentiles began to mutiny, and said it was because they were not suffered, according to their ancient use, to do sacrifice to the river. The governour fearing open sedition, acquainted the Emperor, who returned this answer, It was better to preserve our duty to God, than to preser the streams of Nile, or the plenty of the country occasioned thereby, to piety and religion. Let the river never flow again, if it must be drawn out with charms, appeased with sacrifices, and its waters defiled with blood †. But the next season the controversy was ended, by the river's slowing above its highest mark, which put them into a contrary passion. Then they said, old doting Nile had lost its retentive faculty; while others made a more serious improvement: for being convinced of the vanity of their superstition, they abandoned it, and embraced Christianity.

These proceedings at Alexandria alarmed the Gentiles in other parts of the world. In Arabia, Palestine ‡, Phanicia, &c. they stood upon their guard, and hired country-men to come in and defend their temples. At Apamea there was a famous temple dedicated to Jupiter, a structure strongly compacted. Marcellus bishop of the place resolved to have it pulled down, but could get no man to undertake it, so well were the Pagan temples generally built, and the stones so saft cramped to gether with iron and lead, that Libanius fays it cost the Christians no less pains to pull them down, than it had done the Gentiles to build them up *. At length a common porter comes to Apamea, who ventures to undertake the work. He undermined the foundation of the portico's that upheld the fabric, and put fire to them. But a Demon appearing in a black dress, drove away the fire. Marcellus being acquainted, goes to the church and earnestly prays that the Lord would not suffer the tyranny of the devil further to proceed; but would discover Satan's weakness and his own divine power, that the conversion of insidels might not be hindred. Having thus prayed, he took a pot of water he had before fet on the holy table, and threw it upon the fire, which like so much oil blew up the flames, so as in a few hours, to the admiration of all who faw it, that stately building lay level with the ground. this good bishop going to do the like execution on a temple at Aulon in the country of Apamea, while his company were at work, certain Pagans came behind him, and catching hold on the old gouty man, threw him into the fire, and burned him to death. his fons would have revenged and profecuted the murderers of their father, a fynod in that country would not fuffer them, affirming, that both they and his friends had cause rather to bless God, who counted him worthy to fuffer for his fake.

Ff 2 geth er

This general overthrow of Paganism in the eastern parts of the Roman Empire, made the Gentiles look about them, so as their great advocate Libanius, a person in such savour with the Emperor, as he made him Pratorian Prasect, about this time published an oration pro templis, where he encounters the popular arguments the Christians used for demolishing these edifices, and pleads the cause of the Pagans boldly. He contends the Christians had no reason to throw them down in compliance with the zeal of Constantine and Constantius; these Emperors having been signally punished for their attempts tempts of this kind, Constantine's posterity being soon cut off, and some of them came to untimely ends. Constantine himself lived in perpetual fear of the Perfians; and as to his adherents, who reaped the spoils of the temples, remarkable vengeance had overtaken them. He adds, That, next to the imperial palace, temples were the greatest ornaments of cities, and therefore ought not to be destroyed: they were the Emperor's possessions *. Will a wife man cast his goods or purse away? Will a master of a ship throw away the ropes the ship needs? He says, a considerable advantage might be raised by them, they might be lent out, and the rents returned to the exchequer. He blames the Monks, who had been active in pulling them down +, especially those in the fields. He traduces them as impostors, who under a grave and demure habit, by pretended mortification, covered with artificial paleness, cheat the world into a good opinion of themselves, while they are equally guilty of gluttony and excess with others. He also blames bitterly the man who had deceived the Emperor to demolish these temples ||, meaning Cynegius Pratorian Præsect, as Gothofred in his notes on this oration proves ±, calling him a profane man, an enemy to the Gods, cruel, greedy of money, and a reproach to the earth that brought him into the world; a man exalted for no merit, and abusing the power he was invested with, to please a covetous wife. This is the scope of Libanius's discourse. Had not Theodosius been a Prince renowned for Clemency, it had been prodigious impudence and folly to have talked fo to a Christian Emperor. However it did the cause little fervice. The process went on, and the total ruin of the Pagan temples and worship followed soon after; which so far enraged the party, that they made several attempts against the life of the Emperor, but providence preferved him.

While these things were doing in the East, zeal against Paganism did not cool in the West. Martin, bishop of Tours, was very much concerned to bring it to F f 2

^{*} Libanii oratio pro templis, pag. m. 26. + Ib. pag. 11, 12. || Ibid. pag. 28. + Pag. m. 59, 60.

Lives of the Emperors ruin*. The temples of the Gentiles, with all their pomp and retinue, went down apace, and Christian Churches were erected in their room, where there were none before.

Maximus, who commanded in Gaul, by his General Andragathius having killed the Emperor Gratian at Lyons, and barbaroufly denied him burial, usurped the title of Emperor, about the year of our Lord 383. Theodosius employed Ambrose bishop of Milan to persuade the tyrant not to pass into Italy, and in the mean time prepared to go against him in person. He defeated this Usurper first in Hungary, then in Italy, and shut him up in Aquileia, where his own soldiers took off his head, Peace being thus restored to the empire, Theodosius came to Rome with his fon Honorius, where he fummoned the fenate +, and in a fet oration exhorted them to renounce their ancient errors, and embrace the Christian Faith, as the only religion that held forth the true method of pardon of fin and holiness of life. Many of the Pagan Romans where untractable, affirming, They would never prefer an unreasonable belief before an old religion, under which the city had prosper'd 1200 years together. The Emperor replied, If they were thus obstinate, he knew no reason why he should be at pains to maintain them in their idolatry, and would therefore withdraw the public allowances made out of the exchequer, nay, would abolish the things themselves, which he utterly disliked, and the charges thereof would increase the pay of his army. The Pagan Senators said, Their facrifices could not be celebrated without charges from the public; without this, their cities would dwindle into nothing.

This contest for Gentilism was probably managed by Symmachus, a man then of great note and learning, who for a flattering discourse he had wrote in praise of Maximus the usurper ||, and for importunity in his addresses in favour of Paganism, sell so deep under the Emperor's displeasure, as he was forced to take senceuary in a Christian Church, and was beautiful out of Rome; but upon his submission, he was received again into savour. He wrote an apologetic to the Emperor, who advanced him to be consul in the year of our Lord 391, but render'd him uncapable to do any great service to the Pagans, by publishing a law, dated at Milan, February 23d*, expressy probibiting all manner of sacrifices, going into temples, or worshipping images made by men's hands; and instituting great sines and penalties upon the breakers of the law. In June thereafter he directed a rescript to Evagrius, augustal Præsect of Egypt, and to Romanus Commander of the horse†, That none should be allowed to sacrifice, frequent temples, or celebrate any Pagan rites; certifying those who broke this law, that they should obtain no favour nor remission; and that if any judge enter these polluted places during his administration, be shall be forced to pay 15 pounds of gold to the exchequer.

^{*} Sulpicius Severus de vita Martini, cap. 10. & feqq. † Zofimus, lib.4. pag. 779. | Socrates, Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 14.

Ch.4. Valentinian II. and Theodosius.

43

Socrates informs us of other pieces of reformation, which this religious Emperor Theodofius the Great effected at Rome ||, as demolishing some houses that were nests of robbers and whores, in one of which one of his foldiers had been catch'd, and upon his escape, gave the Emperor information; who ordered these wicked people to be punished, and the houses to be thrown down. There was also an infamous punishment of a woman catched in adultery; they used to put her in a bawdyhouse, to serve all comers, and rang a bell when they committed leudness, that none might be ignorant of what was doing. Such were the profane customs of the Pagans! These houses the Emperor caused immediately to be demolished, and ordered that when any person was guilty of adultery, they should be punished by other laws conformable to equity. These things being done, Theodosius with his fon Honorius returned to Constantinople, Valentinian being left Emperor at Rome. Ff4

^{*} Codex Theodof. lib. 16. tit. 10. de Paganis, lege 10.

⁺ Ibidem, lege 11.

Socrates, Hist. Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 18.

Next year the fenate petitioned for liberty to exercise their old religion, but were denied.

Valentinian being at Vienne in Gaul, was there strangled in bed by the treachery of Eugenius, and Arbogastes, General of the army. Eugenius was at first a school-master, and was brought into the court for his eloquence and good writing: He usurped the title of Emperor, Arbogastes retaining the power. The Usurper was courted by the Pagans on all hands, and flattered by their divinations into hopes of fuccess; on which account he restored to them the altar of victory fo much contended for, and gave public allowance out of the treasury to defray the charges of their profane rites. Theode sius resented the murder of Valentinian, as became a generous Prince; he created his fons Arcadius and Honorius Emperors and his Collegues; and before he went against the Usurper, to make the Pagans feel the effects of his displeasure, he forbad the whole exercise of their religion, temples, sacrifices, rites, and ceremonies; which being the last law of this nature that he made now extant *, I here infert it, and it may be thus englished.

The August Emperors Theodosius, Arcadius and Honorius, to Rusinus the Prætorian Præfect.

ET no man of what rank, order or quality soever, whether he be honourable for birth, or eminent for dignity, or of mean birth, breeding or fortune, in any place, or in any city, offer even an harmless sacrifice to senfeless images, or in any more secret way of expiation, worthip his houshold Gods [Larem] with fire, or his genius with wine, or his paternal houshold Gods with fire or smook, or pay any adoration to them, by setting up lights, burning frankincense, or hanging up garlands to them. And if any man shall dare to offer incense, or to consult the reek-

ing

Ch.4. Theodosius, Arcadius and Honorius. 441

ing entrails, let it be lawful for any to accuse him; and being found guilty, let him receive sentence, as in cases of high-treason, even the it should appear that he did not consult against the life of his prince: For 'tis enough to aggravate his crime, that he would rescind the very laws of. nature, search into things unlawful, disclose what is secret, attempt what is probibited, enquire into another's fate, and give hopes of his death or ruin. But if any man shall burn incense to a corruptible image, a piece of buman workmanship, and by a ridiculcus example honour that which himself just now formed, and shall by crowning the stock of a tree with garlands, or by erecting an altar of turfs, do what he can, tho' in a mean way, yet highly injurious to religion, to worship a statue; let him as a person guilty of the violation of religion, be punished with the loss of that house or field, wherein he ministred to such Gentile superstition. For tis our judgment, that all places wherein it shall appear that incense has been burnt (provided they be legally proved to belong to the persons that did so) ought to be confiscated to our Exchequer. But if the place where such a person shall offer any sacrifice, be in any public temple, or chappel, or another man's house or ground, if he did it without the knowledge of the owner, let him be fined in 25 pounds of gold *, and let him who connives at this wickedness be fined in the same sum with him who sacrifices. This our pleasure is to be observed by the judges, defensors and curials of every city, that the officers having discovered any such matter, shall immediately bring it before the judges, and they forthwith to see to the execution of the penalty: But if they shall conceal any thing, either thro favour or carelessness, they shall be punished by the judges; and if the judges, upon information of these officers, shall take no notice of it, but defer punishment, they shall be fined in 30 pound of gold, and their officers be liable to the same penalty. Given at Constantinople, Novemb. 8.

^{*} N.B. The Proportion of Gold to Silver being stated at One to Twelve, one Pound of Gold is 36 lib. Sterl. consequently 25 Pound of Gold makes the Sum of 900 lib. Sterl.

Arcadius the fecond time, and Rufinus being confuls. That is, A. D. 392.

This law struck down Paganism root and branch, so as it never recovered it felf into any tolerable degree of life and power: the Gentiles being now restrained, not only from the groffer kinds of facrifices, but even from what hitherto had been permitted, the very burning of incense, and perfuming their temples and altars *. Theodofius after this prepared an army against the murderers of Valentinian, and usurpers of the empire. He declared his fon Arcadius Conful for the third time, and placing his confidence in Chrift, marched his army into Italy. His forces were inferior in number to those of his enemies, but he fpent the night before the battle in prayer †. Being encouraged by the gracious answer God was pleased to give him, he fought near Aquileia, and was victorious. The very wind favoured him, beating back the darts and arrows of his enemies into their faces, and blinding them with dust. Eugenius was taken, and killed for his impious usurpation: Arbogastes fled, and for fear killed himself. Claudian a Heathen sings sweetly of this remarkable victory ||.

Soon after this, Theodosius fell sick, and died at Milan, February 24th, A.D. 395, having lived sixty, and reigned

fixteen

* Libanius pro templis, pag. 10. + Socrates, Hist. lib. 5. cap.25. Theodorer. Hist. lib. 5. cap.24. Sozom. lib. 7. cap.24. | Claudian. de 3. Consulatu Honorii, ver. 93. & seqq.

Te propter gelidis Aquilo de monte procellis Obruit adversas acies, revolutaque tela Vertit in auctores, & turbine reppulit hastas. O nimium dilecte Deo, cui fundit ab antris Æolus armatas byemes; cui militat ather, Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti.

The same in English:

For thee the Northern Wind from hills with mighty blafts O'erwhelms thine enemies, their darts and arrows cafts Back in their faces, them to overthrow; Too well belov'd of God, for whom the air does blow Whole armed winters, which the Heavens do tend, And winds, which at thy Trumpet Sounds attend.

fixteen years +, leaving the empire to his two fons, Arcadius and Honorius, the former at seventeen years of age, succeeding in the East, the other at eleven, in the West; Rusinus being tutor to the latter, and Stilico to the former. Ambrose says of him, I loved the man; for when he was dying, he was more concerned for the state of the Church than for himself. He was indeed a nursing father to the Christian Church, and a restorer of her breaches.

Before I conclude this chapter, I shall observe, that the Christian Religion was propagated in Persia in the fourth century. Some authors are of opinion, that there were Christians in that kingdom in the days of John the Apostle, since his first epistle is in some copies directed to the Parthians ||. And Bardesanes, who slourish'd in Mesopotamia in the end of the second century, writes, That there were Christians in his time in the country of the Parthians, of the Medes and Persians, as far as Bactria. But in the fourth age the kingdom of Christ was further enlarged in Persia. In the beginning thereof, St. James of Nisibia went from Mesopotamia into Persia, to visit the Christians who were already there, and to make new ones. The Christian Religion was spread there as early as the council of Nice in 325. Adiabene was almost all Christian. Constantine the Great was very glad to hear fo good news; and Sapor King of Perfia having fent ambaffadors to him about the year 332, to make an alliance with him, he wrote a letter to that King, wherein he prays him to grant protection to the Christians that were in his kingdom. Nevertheless there arose a perfecution in Persia against the Christians, which was raised by the Magi, who accused Simeon Arch-bishop of Seleucia, and Ctefiphon, of favouring the Romans, who were then at war with the Persians. Safor being enraged against the Christians upon that calumny, burden'd them with unsupportable taxes, and ordered all the priests and ministers of the Christians to have their heads cut off, commanded their Churches to be demolished, and all that belonged to them to be carried into the public treasury, and Simeon to be brought to him, as a traitor to the state and religion of the Pirsians. These orders were executed, and Simeon taken and brought to the King in irons. He refusing to worship the sun, was fent into prison, and some time after condemned to death, with many other Christians ||. The year following Sapor published an edict, wherein he condemned to death all that should profess Christianity. This edict was followed by a general perfecution, in which a great number of Christians perished. Sapor ordered, that none should be put to death but the Chiefs of the Christian Religion, that is, the bishops and priests; the persecution was violent against them, and did not end but with the death of that king. Isdigerd, who succeeded Sapor, after some others, in the year 399, was very favourable to the Christians*, at least in the beginning of his reign: but his fon Varanes perfecuted them cruelly, and even hindred them from flying from the perfecution, by going out of his dominions.

⁺ Socrates, Hist. lib. 5. cap. 26.

Du Pin's Abridgment of Church History, vol. 2. pag. 86.

Upon the Emperor Theodosius's death, the Gentiles seem to have resumed new hopes, and therefore Arcadius, about six months after his accession to the throne, upon his father's demise, debarred them all use of temples or sacrifices in any place, or at any time whatsoever, reviving all former penalties made against them †. The next year he cancelled all privileges anciently granted to Pagan Priests of any order, or under any title or name whatsoever, since it was not reasonable they should enjoy those privileges, whose very profession was condemned by law ‡. Then the temples, being the nests of idolatry and superstition, went down in all places of the East: the materials whereof Arcadius, the year following, gave for repairing highways, bridges, aquæducts, and other public walls and buildings!!!. And whereas in some places, temples were left standing in the fields, for conveniency of the country people, he commanded even those to be taken down, that so the foundation of superstition *, which with respect to the temples and idolatry of the Pagans in Phænicia, was procured by Chrysostom; who also understanding that the Scythian Nomades, who dwelt beyond the Ister, were disposed to entertain the Gospel, but were destitute of any to preach it to them, got men of an apostolical spirit to undertake this work. Theodoret says +, I have read letters writ to Leontius Bishop of Ancyra, concerning the conversion of the Scythians, and desiring fit teachers might be sent to them.

|| Sozomen. Hist. Eccl. lib. 2. cap. 8, ---- 15.

^{*} Socrates, lib. 7. cap. 8. + Codex Theod. lib. 16. tit. 10. lege 13.

[#] Ibid. lege 14. | | Ibid. lib. 15. tit. 1. lege 36.

Chrysostom also finding the Goths over-run with Arianism, got some proper persons of that country, and ordained them readers, deacons and presbyters, and affigned them a Church within the city. By their industry he reclaimed many to the Catholic Church ||; and that this might fucceed the better, he himself went often and preached among them, making use of an interpreter to convey his discourse to the people, and persuaded other eloquent preachers to do the like. Honorius did not carry the reformation so far in the West as his brother did in the East. He forbad all sacrifices; but commanded all ornaments of public buildings, fuch as statues and images, to be preserved, any laws or statutes to the contrary notwithstanding ‡. The council of Carthage petitioned , "That all remainders of idolatry "in Ajric might be abolished; that all temples that " stood in the fields, or in private corners, might be " pulled down; that the Gentile feasts and entertainments " attended with profane fcandalous dancings (at which " fometimes they constrained Christians to be present, " and that upon the folemnities of the martyrs) might " be prohibited; that the sports and shews exhibited on " the theatres, might not be on the Lord's-Day, or ^{*} Ibid. lib. 16. tit. 10. lege 16. + Hist. Eccl, lib. 5. cap. 29.31.

[†] Ibid. cap. 30. || Ibid. cap. 30. ‡ Codex Theodofii, lib. 16. tit. 10. lege 15.  Codex Canonum Ecclesiæ Africanæ, Can. 58, 60, 61. Conc. Tom. 2. col. 1085.

"upon may Christian Solemnity, and that no Christian be compelled to be there." In answer to which petition, the Emperor enacted, by orders sent to Apollodorus, proconsul of Afric*, "That as to temples, if not used to any unlawful purpose, they should stand intire; but if any man should do facrisice in them, he should be punished according to law; and all idols, abused to vain and soolish superstition, should be taken down by the public officers. That as to their public feasts and meetings, the law had already forbidden all profane rites; but that their common meetings, their shews, and entertainments of the people, should be still suffered; provided they were done without facrisices, or any damnable superstition, as the words of the law bear."

Thus have we feen how Paganism ebbed and slowed in the reigns of the feveral princes, after Christianity became the Religion of the empire in the fourth century. The fum of the whole we have in the words of Theodoret +: " Constantine the Great, a prince worthy to " be praifed, who first adorned the imperial throne with piety, when he observed the world running "mad after idolatry, expresly forbad that any should worship Damons. His sons followed their father's " footsteps: but Julian revived the wickedness of Pa-"ganism, and added new fewel to its old errors. To " him fucceeded Jovian, who again prohibited the wor-" ship of idols. The elder Valentinian governed Europe " according to the same rules; while Valens in the East " permitted every body to worship and adore what "they pleased, but constantly persecuted those, and " those only, who maintain'd the Catholic and Aposto-" lic Doctrine. All his time the altars fmoaked with " incense, and the Gentiles brought their facrifices and " drink-offerings to their images, and kept their pub-" lic feafts in the open market-place: The priests and votaries of Bacchus, clothed in goat's skins, ran up and down, tearing dogs in pieces, howling and making a dreadful noise, behaving themselves in a most wild and frantic manner, with the rest of those mad ceremonies, whereby they were wont to cele-to brate their profane sestivals. All which the most religious Prince Theodossius, when he came to the empire, did utterly extirpate and abolish, and drove them to eternal silence and oblivion."

^{*} Codex Theod. lib. 16. tit. 10. lege 17, 18.

⁺ Historia Eccl. lib. 5. cap. 20.

We may hear more of the Progress of Christianity, and of the Overthrow of Paganism, in the sequel of this history. In the mean time, I conclude this volume; heartily praying, That the kingdom of satan may fall as lightning from heaven, and that the kingdoms of the world may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and that he may reign for ever and ever.

The End of the First Volume.

A N

Alphabetical Index

TO THE

FIRST VOLUME.

| A. | |
|--|--------|
| Dam, Consequences of his Fall. Page 122, | 122 |
| | 202 |
| Age, Apostolical, some account of it. 272, | 273 |
| Alcoran, Reasons for rejecting it. 61, | |
| Alexander Severus, Emperor, his Character. 355. Venera | tion |
| for Jesus Christ, and Christians. | 356 |
| Andrew, Apostle, a View of his Life. 285, 286. Account of | his |
| | 286 |
| | 417 |
| Antoninus Pius writes in favour of the Christians. 337. His De | |
| 4 1 70 1 1 0 0 | 338 |
| | ibid. |
| Apis, Egyptian Deity, 162. An account of his Worship, ibid. | |
| Signification of his Name, applied to Noah. | 167 |
| Apollo, how represented by the Pagans, 23. His Character | |
| Christians. 387, 388. His Temple in Daphne burnt. | 417 |
| Apollonia, her Martyrdom. | 360 |
| Apollonius, of Thyana, an account of that Impostor. 347, What Credit to be given to his Life, written by Philostra. | 340. |
| 348, | |
| Apologies, for Christianity, their design and use. | 319 |
| Apolles, their Character 122, 122. When they left Ferula | lem. |
| Apostles, their Character. 132, 133. When they left Ferusa 271, 272. The meaning of their Appellation. 273. Preroga | tives |
| of their Office. 274, &c. Not Bishops of particular Places. | 274. |
| Their Power. | 275 |
| Apotheosis, the Manner of performing that Ceremony. | 25 I. |
| Imitated by Papists in Canonization of Saints. | ibid. |
| | emo- |
| lisheth fome. | 445 |
| Ashima, Heathen God, the same as the Sun. | 198 |
| | Who |
| | 201. |
| At l | eists, |

An Alphabetical Index:

| An Alphabetical index. |
|---|
| Atheists, why worse than Pagans, and even Devils. 12, 13 Atoms, their fortuitous Concourse not the cause of things. 6, 22, |
| Austin, Monk comes into England. 77. Success of his Miniftry. ibid. 78. Is opposed by the British Clergy. 78, 79 |
| В. |
| Baal, an Idol, the meaning of his Name. 187. Worshipped by the Carthaginians. 188. in Gaul. ibid. Italy. ibid. The Manner of his Worship. 189. Worshipped by different Names, in different Nations. 190. The same with Jupiter. ib. His several Epithers. |
| Baal-Berith, the same with Cybele. 191, 192. Her Worship and Festivals. |
| Baal-Peor, a Moabitish Idol. 175, 176. An Account of it. 177. The same with Priapus. ibid. Represents Noah. ibid. |
| Babylon, mention d by St. Peter, not Rome. 279, 280 |
| Bacchus, various Images of that God. 193, 194 |
| Bartholomew, Apostle, his Life. 292. Supposed the same with Nathanael. ibid. An account of his Mission, from Socrates, |
| and Nicephorus. 293. His Death. Beelzebub, various Opinions about that Idol's Name. 193, 194. |
| Probably the same with Pluto. ibid. Its Form. 221 |
| Berosus, the Date and Character of his History. 104, 105 Bible, its Greek Version serviceable in the Conversion of the Gentiles. 26 |
| Britons, their Idolatry. 260, 261 |
| Brutes, not mere Machines. 23. Nor endowed with Reason. 24. Byzantium, made the Seat of the Empire, 388. Called New Rome and Constantinople. ibid. |
| C |
| Caffrees, unjustly accused of Atheism. 9, 10 |
| Calf, (Golden, its Shape. 158. Its Weight. 159. How wor- |
| shipped by the Ifraelites. |
| Calvary, Clefts in that Mountain own'd to be Miraculous by a |
| Deist. 315, 316 Caracalla, Emperor, his Character. 354. And Death. ibid. |
| Carthage, when built. |
| Celsus, Epicurean Philosopher, his Character. |
| Ceres, her Descent and History. 239, 240 |
| Cefarea, that City loses its Charter under Julian the Apostate. 418. Church Revenues seiz'd there. ibid. |
| Chinese, their History fabulous. 112. Their Skill in Astronomy. |
| Christianity, its superiour Excellency to all other Religions. 142. |
| It is advantageous to Society. 145. Its Excellency appears |
| from the Purity of its End. 146. It affords a Remedy for the |
| Vol. I. Gg Miferies |
| |

An Alphabetical Index

Miscries incident to Man. 147. Declares the Glory of God. ibid. The Purity of its Morality. ibid. 148. Commended by its Mysteries. 149, 150. What Change it made in Men. 322. Triumphs over Persecution.

Christians, how excellent, considered as an Ecclesiastical Society.

145. How considerable their number was in Tertullian's days. 308, 309. Fustin Martyr's Appeal to Trypho on that Head. 309, 310. Their Unanimity. 310. Universality. 311. Their Patience under sufferings made many Proselytes. 324. What instigated the Pagans against them.

Chronology, known only by the Scripture. 78, &c. That of the Scripture confirm'd by Pagan Writers.

Church, Primitive, Character of its Teachers. 321. And Members. ibid. How their Courage was mifreprefented by the Pagans.

325

Commandments, the Ten, their Excellency.

36, 97

Constant, Son to Constantine the Great, his Zeal against Paganism. 395. Murthered by order of the Ulurper Magnentius.

Constantine, the Great, his Descent. 378. Goes to his Father at York. 379. Made Emperor by his Father's Will, and received by the Army. ibid. Marries. ibid. Marches against Maxentius. 380. Receives affurance of Victory by the Cross. ibid. Instructed in Religion. 381. Conquers Maxentius. ibid. His first Edict in favour of the Christians. 382. Abolishes Crucifixion. 383. His Kindness to the Bishops. 383. His Expedition against Licinius. 384. Defeats him, and becomes Mafter of the whole Empire. 385. Forbids Divination and Magic. 386. Orders the Observation of the Lord's Day. ibid. And Friday in Honour of our Saviour's Passion. ibid. Employs Christian Officers. 387. His Orders for building Churches. ibid. Exhorts Governours of Provinces to Christianity. ibid. Fixes the Seat of the Empire at Byzantium. 388. His vigorous Endeavours to root out Idolatry. 390, 391. baptized. 392. Reasons why he delay'd his Baptism. 393. Dies. ibid. His Character by Eufebius. ibid. Division of the Empire on his Death.

Constantius, Son to Constantine the Great, becomes Master of the whole Empire. 396. Makes a Law against Divination and Magic. ibid. 397. Dies. ibid.

D

Dazon, several Opinions about the Name of that Idol. 195, 196.
Probably the same with Neptune. 196, 197. Its Form. 196
Diana, her Character and Worship.
236
Dioclesian, savours the Christians in the beginning of his Reign.
365. Consents to their Persecution. 370. Resigns the Purple.
371 Diodorus

to the First Volume.

| Diodorus Siculus, what Credit his History deserve:. 104 |
|---|
| Divinations, Cicero's Opinion of them. 256, 257 |
| Decius, Emperor, his Character. 359. Death. ibid. |
| Domitian, his Character. 328. Death. 329 |
| Druids, their Name and Office. |
| Duties, to our selves, deducible from the Divine Perfections. 35, |
| 36 |
| 5 |
| E. |
| Egyptians, their Hiltory tabulous. 101, &c. Their Year uncer- |
| Ezyptians, their History fabulous. 101, &c. Their Year uncertain. 106. Their Idolatry. 159, 160. Ridiculed even by fober Pagans. ibid. How they became acquainted with some |
| ober Pagans, ibia. Flow they became acquainted with iome |
| Divine Truths. 228 |
| Eunuch, of Queen Candace, his Story. |
| Evil, the necessity of knowing its Origin. 46, 47 |
| G. |
| Gad and Meni, Pagan Deities, an Account of them. 203, 204 |
| Galerius, Cafar, his Aversion to Christians. 369. Is made Em- |
| peror. 372. Continues the Perfecution. ibid. Number of |
| Martyrs. 373. Its Duration. ibid. |
| Galli, Pagan Priests, some Account of them. 176, 177 |
| Gauls, their Idolatry. 262 |
| Gideon, his Ephod worshipped. 219. Wherein that Sin con- |
| fifted. |
| Genesis, the Extent of that History. |
| God, the Necessity of his Existence. 3, 4. His Being demonstrated by Moral and Natural Reasons. 7, 8. His Existence universally acknowledged. 9, 10, 11, 30. Belief of such a |
| strated by Moral and Natural Reasons. 7, 8. His Existence |
| univerfally acknowledged. 9, 10, 11, 30. Belief of such a |
| Being proceeds not from Fear, Ignorance, or Policy. 10. |
| His Existence appears from Configure. 11. From the Na- |
| ture of the Soul. ibid. 12. Why he is infinite, immutable, |
| ture of the Soul. ibid. 12. Why he is infinite, immutable, incorruptible, independent, and One. 14, 15. His Unity own'd by fome Pagan Philosophers. 15. Why more than |
| own'd by some Pagan Philosophers, 15. Why more than |
| one adored by the Heathens. ibid. He must be an intelligent |
| Being. ibid. 16. Endow'd with perfect Liberty. 16, 17. Om- |
| nipotent and Wife. 17, 18. Infinitely just. 18, 19. Our |
| Duties to him. 33. Honour due to him appears from his Perfections. 34. Love and Fear due to him. ibid . Why to |
| be venerated. 37. Different Opinions, and dark Notions of |
| God among the Heathens. ibid. 38. His Will committed to |
| Writing. 99. His Unity afferted by some Pagans. 231, |
| Oc. |
| Good, Chief, different Opinions concerning it. 392 40 |
| Goths, the Progress of Christianity among them. 428. Cor- |
| rupted with Arianism. ibid. Reclaimed by Chrysostom. 145 Grace, its Necessity. |
| Grace, its Necessity. |

An Alphabetical Index

| Gratian, made Emperor. 429. Makes Theodosius his Collegue ibid. Resuses the Title of Pontifex Maximus. 431. His Death. |
|---|
| Grecians, the Character of their History. 107, 108. Whence |
| they derived their Idolatry. |
| Gregory Nazianzen, senior, his Courage in opposing Julian the Apostate. |
| Apoltate. 418 |
| H. |
| Hadrian, Emperor, his Character. 336. His Death. ibid. His |
| Speech to his Soul in his last Moments. ibid. |
| Happiness, true, not understood by the Pagan Philosophers. 53 |
| Heathens, their History more Modern than that of Moses. 99, &c. Their Learning borrow'd from the Jews. 73, 74, 111 |
| Their Theology not to be excused, or palliated. 231, 232 |
| Heliogabalus, why so named, 354. His Character. 355. Death ibid. |
| Hellenism, what. |
| Herod, Agrispa, his miserable End. 238 |
| Herodotus, the Date of his History. 99. Its Credit. |
| Hieracles, his Book against Christians answer'd by Eusebius. 347 History, facred, how disguised by the Pagans. 114, 115 |
| History, facred, how difguised by the Pagans. 114, 115 Hinnon, Valley, why so called. 180 |
| Hinnon, Valley, why fo called. Honorius, Emperor, how far he acted against Idolatry. 445. Pre- |
| ferves the Pagan Temples. 446 |
| Τ |
| Iberians, now Georgians, by whom, and when converted. 389 |
| Idolatry, meaning of that Term. 151. Its Origin, and State in |
| different Nations. 152, &c. Several kinds mentioned in the |
| Scripture. 175. Its Abfurdity from the Number of Gods. |
| 225. From the corrupt Morals of those Gods. ibid. 226. |
| From their Original and Decease. 226, 227. And the Divi- fion of their Divinity. 229, &c. |
| Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, his ardent Desire of Martyrdom. |
| 330 |
| Images, their Antiquity. 154, 155. Variety. 156. With what |
| View used. ibid. When brought into Persia. 209 |
| Imposture, its Nature and Views. 136, &c. |
| Independent Beings, their Succession impossible. 34 Indians, first converted. 389 |
| Inspiration, Divine, what. |
| Is and Osiris, their History and Signification. 166 |
| fames, the Greater, his Life. 287. Death, as related by Cle- |
| ment of Alexandria, ioid. How it was revenged. 288 |
| the Left, his Life. 297. Death, as related by Josephus. 298. and Egespeus. 299. The Design of his Epistle. ibid. 330 |
| and Egospipus. 299. The Design of his Epistle. ibid. 330 Jews, their Religion reveal'd by God. 65, 66. Their Origin, |
| according to Justin. 116, 117. Their Character drawn by |
| |

to the First Volume.

| to the Time volume. |
|--|
| that Historian. ibid. By Tacitus. 118. By Plutarch. 119,120. and Juvenal. 120. Falily accused of Idolatry. 223. Vindicated against Justin. ibid. Against Tacitus and Appian. 224. Their Dispersion, how serviceable toward the Conversion of the Gentiles. |
| Fobn, the Apostle, his Life. 289, &c. Some particular Favours |
| conferr'd on him by Jefus Christ. ibid. His miraculous Escape |
| from the Cauldron of boiling Oil, attested by Tertullian. 291 |
| Fovian, Emperor, chosen. 421. His Speech on that Occasion. |
| ibid. His Peace with the Perfians. ibid. Is lampoon'd by the |
| Pagans. 422. His Conduct in favour of the Christians. ibid. |
| His Edict in favour of consecrated Virgins. 223. His Death. |
| |
| |
| Fude, Apostle, his Life. 300, 301 |
| fudas, Iscariot; Meaning of that Name. 302. Why made an |
| Apostle. ibid. |
| Fulian, the Apostate; why he did not put the Christians to |
| death. 325. His Life and Character. 398. Is made Cafar. |
| 400. Professes Christianity in Gaul. ibid. His Success there. |
| ibid. Proclaimed Emperor by the Roman Legions. ibid. Goes |
| to Constantinople. 401. Acts in favour of Paganism. ibid. |
| His open Apostacy. 402. Repeals Laws in favour of the |
| Christians. ibid. Means which he used to suppress Christianity |
| and refere Describe the Writes against Christiania |
| and restore Paganism. 403, &c. Writes against Christianity. |
| 404. Consults Apollo's Oracle. 415. Receives no Answer. |
| 416. Persecutes the Christians at Antioch. ibid. Receives a |
| Mortal Wound. 419. His impious Speech on that occasion. |
| 420. The Christians rejoice at his Death. ibid. |
| Furio, her Descent, and History. 239. How represented. ibid. |
| Jupiter, his Character. 235, 236. A remarkable Account of the |
| Demolition of his Temple at Apamea. 436. Several of that |
| Name. 100, 101 |
| Justin Martyr, the Success of his Apology. 337. His Death |
| procured by Crescens. |
| - , , |
| L. |
| Learned Men, great Number of them in the secondCentury. 352 |
| T = |
| Legion, Thundering, the Account of it well attested. 343, 344 |
| |
| Thebean, question'd by good Authors. |
| Letters, known first to the Jews. 107. Brought into Greece by |
| Cadmus. ibid. |
| Libanius, his Oration in favour of Pagan Temples. 436, 437 |
| Licinius, made Emperor in the East. 384. Opposes Christianity. |
| ibid. His blasphemous Speech to his Army. ibid. His Death. |
| 385 |
| Lucian of Samofata, his Character. 351. What he fays of the |
| Chriftians. 352 |
| Luke, |
| |

| An Alphaberieal Index |
|--|
| Luke, Evangelist, his History and Stile. 308. When he wrote his Gospel. ibid. Account of him from ferom. ibid. |
| M. |
| Magians, their Origin, and Tenets. 210, 211. Reformed by |
| Zoroastres. 212, 213. Their Scripture. 214, 215 |
| Mahomet, his Religion absurd, as it appears from the History of |
| his Life. 54, &c. Some Remarks on the Wickedness of his |
| Life. 59, &c. His View in publishing the Alcoran. 136 |
| Mahuzzim, a Pagan God. 205. According to Mr. Mede, An- |
| gels and Saints are fignified by that Word. |
| Manetho, what Credit to be allow'd his History. |
| Marcellus, Bishop of Apamea, destroys the Temple of Jupiter. |
| 436. His Martyrdom. ibid. Marcus Aurel. Antoninus, Emperor, his Character. 338 |
| 7 1 T 1:0 A |
| Mark, Evangelit, an Account of him from Eugebius. 304 Martin, Bishop of Tours, his Zeal against Paganism. 437, 438 |
| Martyrs, of Lyons, their Acts. 43/3, 438 |
| Matter, not eternal. 4, &c. |
| Matthew, Apostle, his Gospel found in India. 293. His Life. |
| 294. When and in what Language he wrote his Gospel. ibid. |
| Account of his Mission. 295 |
| Matthias, Apostle, his Election. 303. Labours. ibid. Account |
| of his Death, from Dositheus. ibid. |
| Mavia, Queen of the Saracens, her Compact with the Romans. |
| 427 |
| Maximus, Emperor, his Character. 357. Is forc'd to consent to |
| Constantine's Edict in favour of the Christians. 382. His | | Death. 382 |

Mercury, his Descent, &c.

Messiah, how described by the Prophets. 71. Expected by the Fews at the time of our Lord's Appearance in the World. 266 Minerva, her Character and Rank. 236. Inscription over an Image of that Goddess.

Miracles, what. 65, 66. Their Use. 66, 67. Their Force in the primitive Church. 316, Oc.

169

Mnevis, an Egyptian Deity. Moloch, in what his Worship consisted. 178, 179. A Description Worshipped by several Nations under of that Idol. 180. different Names. ibid. The same with Saturn.

Morality, that of the Pagans defective and corrupt. Moses, his Sincerity. 94. Modesty. 95. Disinterestedness. ibid. The Antiquity of his Writings proved by antient Authors. When he began to write. ibid. 100. The Authority of his Writings proved even from Pagan Authors. 112, &c. His Character by Diodorus Siculus. 115, 116. Justin. 117. and Tacitus. 118. He is fignified by feveral Pagan Fables. 167, 168

5, 6

Motion, not the necessary Effect of Matter.

to the First Volume.

N.

| Nature, its Light insufficient to direct us in the Worship of God. |
|--|
| 28, &c. Or the Means for obtaining Pardon of our Sins. |
| 50, &c. Cannot conduct us to eternal Happiness. 53, 54 |
| Necessity of Existence, the Meaning of that Term. 2 Neighbour, our Duty to him deducible from the divine Per- |
| fections. 34, 35 |
| Neptune, his History. 241 |
| Nergal, a Heathen God, the same with the Sun. 198 |
| Nero, Emperor, his Character. 326. Lays the burning of Rome on the Christians. |
| Nisroch, a Heathen God, what. |
| Noah, his Story, how difguised by the Pagans. |
| 0 |
| Oracles, Pagan, filent on our Lord's appearance in the world. |
| 312. As appears from Pagan Writers. 313, 314 |
| Origen, against Celsus, the Character of that Book. 352 |
| n. |
| Parage the Abstraction of their Deligion |
| Pagans, the Absurdity of their Religion. 144 Pantheon, at Edessa, shut up. 430. Open'd again. ibid. |
| Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, his Character. 280 |
| Passions, why to be regulated. |
| Paul, the Apostle, his Life. 280. An account of his Labours, |
| from Clement of Rome. 285. and Theodoret. ibid. |
| Peace, universal, when Jesus Christ appear'd, facilitated the Pro- |
| pagation of his Gospel. 266 Peregrinus, the Cynic, his Character. 35. Death. ibid. |
| Persecution, I. By Nero. 326. Its Extent and Duration, 227, 228. |
| Persecution, I. By Nero. 326. Its Extent and Duration. 327, 328. II. By Domitian. 329. III. By Trajan. 329, 330. Its Extent. |
| 331. Is continued by Hadrian. 334, 335. Its Duration. 336. IV. By Antoninus Pius. 337. V. By Antoninus the Philosopher. |
| IV. By Antoninus Pius. 337. V. By Antoninus the Philosopher. |
| 338. Its Duration. ibid. and Severity. ibid. 339, 341. Reafon of its Relaxation. 343, 344. VI. By Severus. 346. Mar- |
| tyrs of Note. ibid. VII. By Maximinus. 357. Motives for |
| it. ibid. Its Date. ibid. Extent. 358. VIII. By Decius. 359. |
| Its Severity. ibid. 360. Martyrs of Note. 361. Continued |
| by Gallus. ibid. IX. By Valerian. 363. Its Date. ibid. Mar- |
| tyrs of Note. ibid. 364. X. By Dioclesian. 369. Its Severity. |
| 370, 371. See Galerius. Persecutors, their miserable Ends. 374, 375 |
| Perfea, an Account of the Religion of that Country, from Dr. |
| Prideaux. 209, &c. From Q. Curtius. 216, 217. From |
| Theodoret. 217. From Plutarch. ibid. From Herodotus. 218. |
| When their Idolatry was introduced among the Fews. ibid. |
| Progress of it in other Nations. 209, 210. Christianity pro- |
| 3 pagated |

An Alphabetical Index

| pagated there in the fourth Century. 443. Planted early in that |
|--|
| Country. ibid. Perfecuted by King Sapor. 444 |
| Peter, Apostle, his Life. 276, &c. His being named first, no proof of his Primacy. 277. Reason of his Name. ibid. |
| proof of his Primacy. 277. Reason of his Name. ibid. |
| Was not the Founder of the Roman Church. 278, 279. Did |
| not preside in the Council of Ferusalem. 298 |
| Phenicians, their History. 101. Their Idolatry. 171, 172 |
| Philip, the Apostle, his Life. 291. Death, as related by Nice- |
| phorus. 292 |
| Philip, the Deacon, his preaching. 306. Jerom's and Cyril's |
| Account of him. ibid. |
| Philip, the Emperor, whether a Christian. 358, 359 |
| Planets, why worshipped by the Heathens. |
| Pliny, the younger, his Epistle to Trajan in favour of the Chri- |
| O. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. 1. |
| |
| Plutarch, when he wrote. 109 Pluto, how represented. 241 |
| |
| _ 1 1 XT |
| |
| Prayer, its Necessity. |
| Prophecies, the Use of them in proving the Truth of a Reli- |
| gion. 67, 68. Several Sorts. ibid. How to be distinguished. |
| 69. The Rules applied to the Scripture. ibid. |
| Proselytes, of the Gate, what. |
| Providence, Defined. 19. Proved from Reason. ibid. 20. From Experience. 20, &c. From the present Constitution of the |
| Experience. 20, &c. From the present Constitution of the |
| World. 22. Its Wisdom. 23. Necessity of it, acknowledged |
| even by wife Heathens. 256. Its Justice. ibid. |
| |
| R. |
| Religion, its fuperior Excellency to Atheism acknowledged, even |
| by Atheists. 30. What it implies. |
| Resurrection, of Jesus Christ, Filate's Account of it to the Em- |
| peror. 269, 270 |
| Revelation, divine, its Necessity and Use. 36, &c. 64. Ac- |
| knowledged by Famblicus. |
| Rewards, and Punishments, whence arises the Supposition of them. |
| 24 |
| Romans, the Date of their Learning. 110. The Character of |
| their History. 111. Origin [and Progress of their Idola- |
| try. 242, 243. Number of their Gods; their Rank and Em- |
| ployments. 244, 245. Festivals. 252. Publick Sports in |
| ployments. 244, 245. Petitivals. 252. Public applies in |
| Honour of them. 253, 254. Various kinds of Priests, and their several Offices. 255, 256. Sacrifices. 256 |
| their leveral Omces. 255, 250. Sacrinces. |
| Russians, their Idolatry. 226, 227 |
| S. |
| Sabaifin, what. |
| Sacrifices, Human, used by the Jews. 178, 179. By several | | other |

to the First Volume.

| other Nations. 181, &c. 257, 263. Variety of Sacrifices a |
|--|
| mong the Pagans. 257, 258. Ceremonies used in them. 258, |
| 259. What the best. 323 |
| Sanchoniathon, his Account of the Creation, 171. A Character |
| of his Works. 172, 173 Saturn, a Description of his Image. 183. His Character. 285. |
| |
| Saxons, British, their Conversion. 75 Scriptures, how proved divinely reveal'd. 69, &c. They are |
| worthy of God. 73, 74. Their Excellency, 74, 75. Their |
| Truth acknowledged even by Enemies of our Religion. 83. |
| Their Harmony. 85. No part of them could be forged. |
| 87, 6°c. |
| Scythians, the Date of their History. |
| Self-Murther, unlawful. 36 |
| Serapis, Temple of that Deity at Alexandria, its Beauty. 432. |
| Attempt to convert it into a Christian Church opposed. ibid. |
| 433. Demolished. 433. Image of the God. ibid. Tradition |
| concerning it. ibid. Is demolished. ibid. Two Churches |
| built on the Ruins of the Temple. 435 |
| Serpent, Brazen, Origin of that Idolatry. 220. The Meaning |
| of that Symbol. 221, 222 |
| Severus, Emperor, his Character. 345 |
| Sheshach, a Pagan Goddess. 204, 205 |
| Simon, the Apostle, why call'd Zelotes. 300. His Life. ibid. |
| Sin, its Origin, why necessary to be known. 46, &c. Not |
| known to the Heathens. 48, 49. The Cause of their Igno- |
| rance. 48. All their knowledge of it was derived from the |
| Holy Scripture. 49. Its Deformity. 50 Soul, prov'd immortal from its Immateriality. 26, 27. From the |
| Passions. 28. The Belief of it beneficial to Society. 29, 30. |
| Admitted by some Pagans. 30. It appears from our Hopes |
| of future Happiness. 31. And from the Nature of a supreme |
| Being. ibid. 32, 33 |
| Spaniards, their Idolatry. 262 |
| Spinosa, confuted. 5, 6 |
| Stetin, in Pomerania, its Idolatry. 263 |
| Succoth Benoth, a Heathen Goddess, the same with Venus. 199, |
| 200 |
| Sun, Moon and Stars, the Antiquity of their Worship. 152, &c. |
| Manner of performing it. ibid. Practifed by the Jews. 207, |
| 208 |
| Symmackus, made Provost of Rome. 431. Pleads for the Altar |
| of Victory. ibid. Is answer'd by Ambrose, Bishop of Milan. |
| 439. Banished. ibid. Restored and made Consul. ibid. |

An Alphabetical Index

Tammuz, a Heathen God, the same with Adonis. 201, 202. Meaning of the Name. Temples, Pagan their Antiquity. 248. Manner of building them. ibid. 249, 250. Statues in them. Teraphim, an Account of them. 157, 158 Testament, Old, its Excellency. 65. Divine Authority. 121, 122 Character of its several Books. 122. Its History confirm'd by Pagan Writers, --- New, how proved the Word of God. 66, &c. Proof common to the Old Testament. ibid. Its Authority established. 128, &c. It could not be forged. 134, &c. confirmed by our Adversaries. Theodofius, made Collegue to Gratian. 429. Prohibits divinatory Sacrifices. 430. Enforces that Prohibition in the East. 431. Summons the Senate at Rome. 438. Harangues them against Paganisin ibid. His Laws against Sacrifices and other Parts of Idolatry. 439. Makes other Reformations at Rome. ibid. Returns to Constantinople. ibid. Resents the Murther of Valentinian. 440. One of his Laws against Paganism at length. ibid. 441. Its success. 441. His Death. ibid. Character by Ambrole. Thomas, Apostle, his Life. 295. His Mission according to Ferom and Nicephorus. ibid. His Labours in East-India. 296 Thucydides, when he flourished. 108. His Character. Tiberius, Emperor, his Opinion of Jesus Christ, and Favour to Christians. 270 Tophet, why so called. 180 Tradition, that of the Church of Rome, its Rife. 94 Trajan, Emperor, his Character. 329. Answer to Pliny's Letter about the Christians. 333, 334. Tertullian's Opinion of it. 334. His Death. Troy, the Date of its War. 107, 108 Tyrannus, his corrupt Practices detected. 434 Valens, Emperor, his Law against Divination. 425, 426. raffes the Orthodox. 428. His Death. Valentinian, chosen Emperor. 423. Goes to Nice. 424. Makes

Troy, the Date of its War.

Troy, the Date of its War.

Tyrannus, his corrupt Practices detected.

V.

Valens, Emperor, his Law against Divination. 425, 426. Harasses the Orthodox. 428. His Death.

Valentinian, chosen Emperor. 423. Goes to Nice. 424. Makes his Brother Valens his Collegue. ibid. Allows Toleration. ibid. Restrains it. ibid. 425. His Law in favour of the Pagans. 427. His Death. 428. Charaster.

Valentinian, jun. Emperor 429. His Death.

Valerian, put to death by Sapor King of Persia.

Valerian, her Charaster and Worship. 286. Babylonian, Prostitutions in her Honour.

199, 209

Victory

to the First Volume.

Victory, Altar of, removed by Constantius. 397. Restored by the Usurper Eugenius. 440. See Symmachus.
Vulcan, his History and Employment. 238. How represented.

ibid. The Manner of his Worship.

World, not Eternal. 7, 8. Why of two Languages only in our Saviour's Time. 65. Why then under one Government. ibid. Its Origin unknown to the Heathens. 77, 78 \mathbf{Z} .

Zoroastres, his Character and Doctrine. 211, &c. His History. 214, 215. His Death. 215

Just Published, Printed for A. MILLAR,

THE History of the Church under the Old Testament, from the Creation of the World; with a particular Account of the State of the Jews before and after the Babylonish Captivity, and down to the present Time: Wherein the Affairs and Learning of Heathen Nations before the Birth of Christ, are also illustrated. To which is subjoined a Discourse, to promote the Conversion of the Jews to Christianity. By ROBERT MILLAR, M.A.

This Book contains the following Chapters:

I. The History of the Church of God, in Six Periods, from the Creation of the World to the Deliverance of the Fews out of Babylon; where, under each Period, the Sacred History is explain'd, Difficulties removed, the Chronology stated and cleared, and the Occurrences in Profane History are consider'd. II. The History of the Fews, from their Return out of the Babylonish Captivity to the End of the Persian Empire; where the Affairs of that Monarchy are also explain'd. A Digression concerning the Affairs, Learning and Writers of Greece before our Saviour's Birth. III. The History of the Jews under the Grecian Empire of Alexander the Great and his Successors, especially in the Kingdoms of Syria and Egypt; where the Affairs of these Nations during that Time are also illustrated. IV. The History of the Jews in the Roman Empire, from the Conquest of Judea by Pompey, to the Destruction of Ferusalem, and Desolation of Judea, by the Emperors Vespasian, Titus and Hadrian; where the Roman Affairs, from the building of their City, especially before the Birth of Christ, are previously consider'd; with some Account of their Writers. V. Of the Sects among the Jews, viz. the Samaritans, Sadducees, Caraites, Pharisees, Essenes and Herodians. VI. Of the Patriarchs who govern'd the Jews, of the Princes of the Captivity, and of the principal Orders of their Doctors since the Destruction of Jerusalem. VII. Of the Religion, Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews. VIII. The History of the Jews, and their Dispersions in the East and West, till the Eighth Century of the Christian Æra. IX. The History of the Jews in the East and West, from the Eighth to the Eighteenth Century, with some Occurrences to the present Time. To which is added, The above-mention'd Discourse, to promote the Conversion of the Jews to Christianity; wherein the most important Controversies with them are stated and cleared. With an Index and Chronological Table to the whole. There are feveral Enquiries into Divinity, facred and profane History, Geography and Chronology, in the feveral parts of this Performance, which cannot be here particularly enumerated; with many things new both as to Matter and Method. And 'tishoped, that as the Defign is more comprehensive than any thing of this kind that hath yet appeared in public, fo it will be useful to such as value and defire the Knowledge of these important Subjects.

